con-stringe (kŏn-strĭnj'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -stringed (-strĭnjd'), p.pr. -stringing (-strĭn'jĭng)], to contract; draw together; compress.—adj. con-strin'gent.—n. con-strin'gen-cy.

con-struct (kŏn-strŭkt'), v.t. [< Lat. cum, together + struere (structus), to build], 1, to build; form; put together; compose; 2, to contrive; devise; invent, as an explanation or theory; Geom., to draw, picture, or represent by means of points, lines, or planes, so as to show a given condition or relation; as, to construct an angle equal to a given angle.—n. con-struc'tor; con-struct'er.

con-struc-tion (kŏn-strŭk'shŭn), n. 1, the method, art, or act of building; 2, that which is built; a structure; an edifice; 3, the act of interpreting or construing; interpretation: Gram., arrangement and syntactical connection between words or parts of a sentence.—adj. con-struc'tion-al.

con-struc-tion-ist (kŏn-strŭk'shŭn-ĭst), n. one who interprets a law or a document, as a national constitution, in a particular or special sense; as, a strict constructionist.

con-struc-tive (kŏn-strŭk'tĭv), adj. 1, pertaining to, or capable of, building; 2, positive and affirmative; tending to help rather than to hinder or depress; tending to build up rather than to destroy: opposite of destructive; as, constructive criticism suggests ways of improvement; 3, based on interpretation or inference rather than on express statement; not direct nor explicit, but implied in an act or situation; as, constructive fraud; constructive malice.—adv. con-struc'tive-ly.—n. con-struc'tive-ness.

con-strue (kŏn'strōō; kŏn-strōō'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -strued (-strōōd; -strōōd'), p.pr. -struing], [see construct], to interpret; explain; analyze and attribute a meaning to; as, his act was construed as a favor: Gram., 1, to analyze (a sentence) so as to show the word relationship and make plain the meaning; hence, when applied to a foreign language, to translate; 2, to put together or combine, as words or grammatical forms, in syntactical relation; as, in Latin some verbs are construed with the dative.—n. con'stru-er (kŏn'-strōō-ẽr; kŏn-strōō'ẽr—adj. con-stru'a-ble.

Syn. parse, explain, infer, deduce. (See interpret.)

con-sub-stan-tial (kŏn"sŭb-stăn'shăl), adj. [< Lat. cum, with + substantia, substance < sub, under + stans (stantis), standing], formed of like substance.—n. con"sub-stan"ti-al'i-ty.

con-sub-stan-ti-a-tion (kŏn"sŭb-stăn"shĭ-ā'-shŭn), n. Theol., the doctrine that the body and blood of Christ are coexistent in and with the bread and wine of the Eucharist, though the latter retain their form and nature: distinguished from transubstantiation, which holds that the substance of the bread and wine becomes the body and blood of Christ.—v.t. and v.i. con"sub-stan'ti-ate.

con-sue-tude (kŏn'swē-tūd), n. [< Lat. consuetudo (-inis), custom], 1, custom; usage; 2, friendly relationship; habitual association.

con-sue-tu-di-na-ry (kŏn"swē-tū'dĭ-nă-rĭ), adj. usual; customary:—n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], a book containing the ritual and ceremonial regulations of a monastery, cathedral, or the like.

con-sul (kŏn'sŭl), n. [Lat. = annual chief magistrate], 1, in Roman history, until the sixth century, one of the two chief officials of the republic; 2, in French history, one of the three chief officials of the republic from 1799 to 1804; 3, an officer commissioned by a government to reside in a foreign port or city, to promote the interests of his country's trade and protect its citizens or subjects: Obs., a senator of Venice.—n. con'sul-ship.—adj. con'su-lar (-sū-lẽr).

con-su-late (kŏn'sū-lāt), n. 1, the office and residence of a consul; 2, the term of office or jurisdiction of a consul.

con-sult (kŏn-sŭlt'), v.t. [< Lat. consulere (-sultus), to consult], 1, to ask advice of; 2, to have regard to or take into consideration:—v.i. to take counsel; confer: with with.—n. con-sult'er.

con-sult-ant (kŏn-sŭl'tănt), n. one who consults or is consulted; specifically, a physician who is called into consultation for advice.

con-sul-ta-tion (kŏn"sŭl-tā'shŭn), n. 1, the act of conferring; 2, a conference, as of surgeons, architects, etc., for mutual counsel.

con-sult-a-tive (kŏn-sŭl'tă-tĭv), adj. conferring; advisory.—adj. con-sult'a-to-ry.

con-sume (kŏn-sūm'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -sumed (-sūmd'), p.pr. -suming], [< Lat. consumere (-sumptus), to eat up], 1, to destroy, as by fire or corrosion; 2, to eat or drink up; use up:—v.i. Rare, to waste away; be exhausted or be destroyed.—adj. con-sum'a-ble.—adv. con-sum'ing-ly.

Syn. expend, dissipate, devour, destroy, waste.

con-sum-ed-ly (kŏn-sūm'ĕd-lĭ), adv. Colloq., excessively; extravagantly.

con-sum-er (kŏn-sūm'ẽr), n. one who or that which uses up, destroys, wastes, etc.: Econ., one who devotes economic goods to the satisfaction of his present wants, and thus uses up the utilities in the goods so disposed of; loosely, one who buys a commodity for use rather than for resale: opposite of producer: consumers' goods, Econ., commodities, or economic goods, that are used for the immediate satisfaction of human desires, such as food, clothing, etc., as opposed to commodities used in the manufacture of other commodities, such as machinery, or raw materials, which are called producers' goods.

con-sum-mate (kŏn-sŭm'ăt; kŏn'sŭ-māt), adj. [< Lat. cum, with + summare (-atus), to complete], perfect; complete: carried to the highest degree:—v.t. (kŏn'sŭ-māt; kŏn-sŭm'ăt), [p.t. and p.p. -mated, p.pr. -mating], to complete; bring to a finish; accomplish.—adv. con-sum'mate-ly.

con-sum-ma-tion (kŏn"sŭ-mā'shŭn), n. 1, conclusion; accomplishment; 2, a desired end; goal.—adj. con'sum-ma-tive (-mă-tĭv).

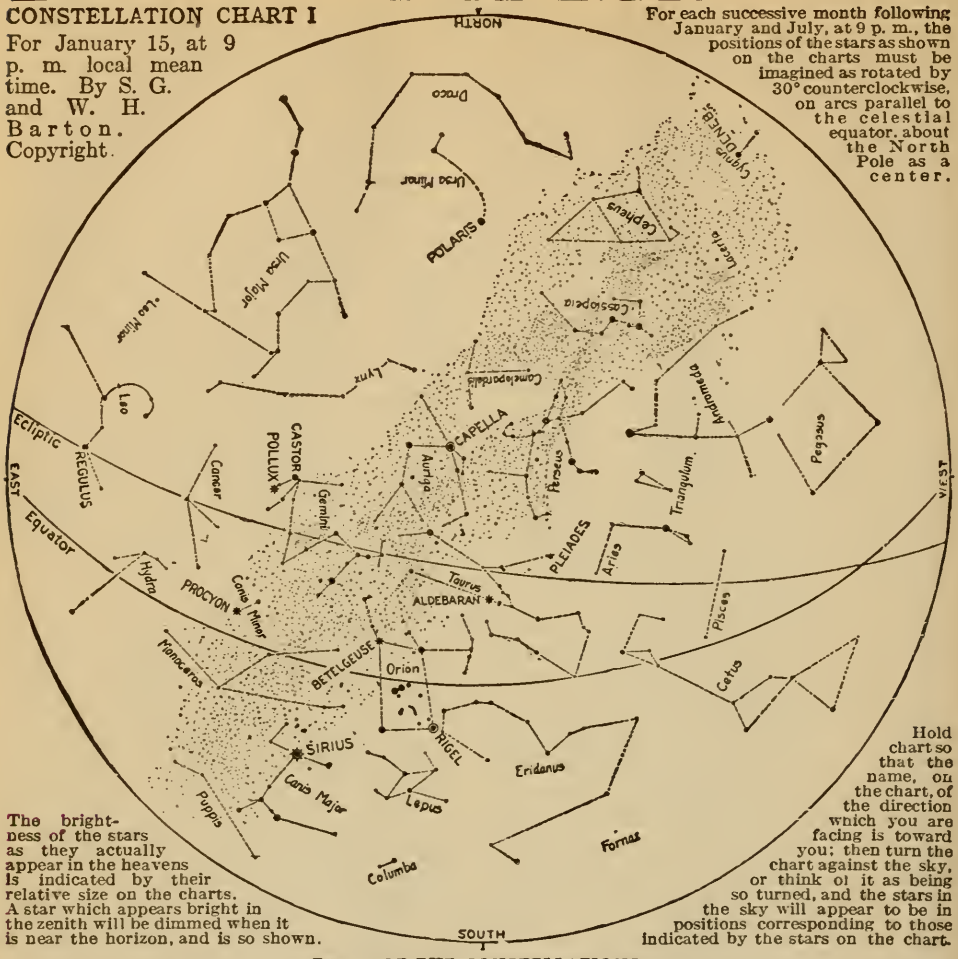
con-sump-tion (kŏn-sŭmp'shŭn), n. [see consume], 1, the act or state of using up or being used up; as, the consumption of our natural resources; 2, the amount used up: Econ., the process of enjoying the utility of or using up economic goods, as food, clothing, or recreation, for the satisfaction of present personal wants; Med., a gradual wasting away of the body; especially, phthisis, or pulmonary tuberculosis: a common term for tuberculosis.

con-sump-tive (kŏn-sŭmp'tĭv), adj. 1, intended to be used up; tending to use up;

CONSTELLATION CHART I

For January 15, at 9 p. m. local mean time. By S. G. and W. H. Barton. Copyright.

For each successive month following January and July, at 9 p. m., the positions of the stars as shown on the charts must be imagined as rotated by 30° counterclockwise, on arcs parallel to the celestial equator, about the North Pole as a center.



The brightness of the stars as they actually appear in the heavens is indicated by their relative size on the charts. A star which appears bright in the zenith will be dimmed when it is near the horizon, and is so shown.

Hold chart so that the name, on the chart, of the direction which you are facing is toward you; then turn the chart against the sky, or think of it as being so turned, and the stars in the sky will appear to be in positions corresponding to those indicated by the stars on the chart.

TABLE OF THE CONSTELLATIONS

In column A, the figures 1, 2, 3 indicate location within 45° of the North Pole, within 45° north or south of the equator, and within 45° of the South Pole, respectively.—In column B, a notation like 1.3.6 means 1 star of the first magnitude, 3 of the second, 6 of the third; stars of less magnitude are clear to the naked eye only under favorable circumstances. A dash indicates no stars as bright as the third magnitude.—Column C gives the number of the month in which the constellation is on the meridian at 9 P. M.—A number with an asterisk [*] stands for the number and the next greater number; as *2 = 2 and 3.

NUMBERED NOTES.—[1] Also, Camelopardus.—[2] Carina, Puppis, Pyxis, and Vela were formerly listed as parts of a single constellation, Argo Navis.—[3] Properly, 4, 5, 6.—[4] Also, Corona Austrina.—[5] Properly, 3, 4, 5.—[6] Also, Mons Mensæ.—[7] Also, Piscis Austrinus.—[8] Also, Scorpio.—[9] Scorpius has eleven stars of the third magnitude.

The charts are adapted for use in latitude 40° north, at 9 p. m. The positions of the stars as shown on the charts must be imagined as rotated about the North Pole, on arcs parallel to the equator, counterclockwise, 15° for each hour later than 9 p. m.

CONSTELLATION CHART II

For July 15, at 9 p. m. local mean time. By S. G. and W. H. Barton. Copyright

The center of the map is the zenith: the circular boundary represents the horizon. Near the horizon stars appear less abundant: this is because the rays of their light are dimmed on the long, oblique path through the atmosphere, and all but the brightest stars are quenched.

The chart shows constellations and fixed stars, star names being printed in capitals. The planets change their brightness and relative positions too rapidly to be shown, remaining, however, within 8° of the ecliptic. See solar system, orrery, illus.

2, pertaining to, or inclined to or affected with, pulmonary tuberculosis:—n. one affected with tuberculosis.—adv. con-sump'tive-ly.—n. con-sump'tive-ness.

cont. abbr. 1, containing; contents; 2, continent(al); 3, continue(d); 4, contraction; contract(ed).

con-tact (kŏn'tăkt), n. [< Lat. cum, together + tangere (tactus), to touch], a coming together of two things; a touching; close union: Elec., the joining point of two conductors through which an electric current passes or may pass:—v.t. to come into, or be in, contact with; touch: Slang, to establish business or social connection with.

con-tact a-gent Chem., a substance that initiates or hastens chemical action between substances: also called catalyst.

con-ta-gion (kŏn-tā'jŭn), n. [< Lat. contagio (-onis), contact < cum, together + tangere, to touch], 1, the communication of disease from one body to another by contact, whether direct or indirect; 2, hence, a disease thus communicable; 3, an agency, as virus, by which disease may be transmitted; 4, pestilence; corruption; 5, the communication of emotions, ideas, etc., from one mind to another.

Syn. infection. Contagion is transmission of disease by actual contact with the affected person, either directly, by touch, or indirectly, by objects used in common, or by the breath, etc. Infection names a far less definite means of disease transmission; general living conditions, such as those affecting air and water, are believed to foster a disease or susceptibility to it; for instance, in a swampy and badly drained country, infection by malarial germs is common. An infectious disease may be contagious as well.

con-ta-gious (kŏn-tā'jŭs), adj. 1, transmitted by contact; communicable by contact; spreading; 2, carrying infection; hence, unwholesome.—adv. con-ta'gious-ly.—n. con-ta'gious-ness.

con-tain (kŏn-tān'), v.t. [< O.F. contenir < Lat. cum, together + tenēre, to hold], 1, to hold, as does a vessel; 2, to comprehend; include; as, this book contains my views; 3, to hold, be comprised of, or equivalent to; as, a quart contains two pints; 4, to restrain or hold back: used with the reflexive pronoun; as, she could scarceiy contain herself: Math., to be a multiple of; be divisible by.—n. con-tain'er.

Syn. include, comprise, cover. (See comprehend.)

con-tam-i-nate (kŏn-tăm'I-nāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -nated, p.pr. -nating], [< Lat. cum, together + -tamen < tag-, root of tangere, to touch], to pollute or defile by contact.—adj. con-tam'i-na-tive.

Syn. corrupt, defile, taint, sully, desecrate.

con-tam-i-na-tion (kŏn-tăm"I-nā'shŭn), n. 1, the act of polluting or making impure; 2, that which pollutes; 3, a taint.

con-temn (kŏn-tĕm'), v.t. [p.t. and -p.p. -temned (-tĕmd'), p.pr. -temning (-tĕm'ĭng; -tĕm'nĭng)], [< O.F. contemner < Lat. contemnere (-temptus), to despise], to scorn; treat with contempt; despise.

con-tem-plate (kŏn'tĕm-plāt; kŏn-tĕm'plāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -plated, p.pr. -plating], [< Lat. contemplari (-atus), to look at < cum, with + templum, open space (for augury)], 1, to consider with thoughtfulness or attention; 2, to look upon as possible; consider as a purpose; intend; as, I contemplate going south:—v.i. to meditate; muse; ponder.—n. con'tem-pla"tor.—n. con"tem-pla'tion.

Syn. reflect upon, study, gaze at, behold, purpose, design, ponder, consider, meditate. (See muse.)

con-tem-pla-tive (kŏn-tĕm'plă-tĭv), adj. pertaining to meditation; of a meditative nature; thoughtful.—adv. con-tem'pla-tive-ly.—n. con-tem'pla-tive-ness.

con-tem-po-ra-ne-ous (kŏn-tĕm"pō-rā'nē-ŭs), adj. [< Lat. cum, together + tempus (-oris), time], living, occurring, or existing at the same time; covering the same time or period. Also, co-tem"po-ra'ne-ous.—adv. con-tem"po-ra'ne-ous-ly.—n. con-tem"po-ra'ne-ous-ness.

Syn. contemporary, synchronous, coeval, simultaneous, coincident. Contemporary is used chiefly of persons, contemporaneous, of facts or events; the time implied by either is not necessarily exactly coincidental, but indefinite; contemporary writers exist in the same period, though their ages may be different or their lifetimes of different length. Contemporaneous events occur, or go on, in the same period.

con-tem-po-ra-ry (kŏn-tĕm'pō-rā-rĭ), adj. 1, existing or occurring at the same time; 2, of one age; coeval:—n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], a person or thing existing at the same time as another. Also, co-tem'po-ra-ry.

Syn., adj. (see contemporaneous).

con-tempt (kŏn-tĕmpt'), n. [see contemn], 1, the act of scorning or despising; 2, the state of being scorned or despised; 3, disdain; scorn; 4, disgrace; shame: Law, disobedience to the rules or orders of a court; disorderly or disrespectful conduct in a court.

con-tempt-i-ble (kŏn-tĕmp'tĭ-bl), adj. meriting scorn; despicable: Obs., scornful; disdainful.—adv. con-tempt'i-bly.—n. con-tempt'i-ble-ness; con-tempt"i-bil'i-ty.

Syn. vile, contemptuous, paltry, mean. Contemptible describes that which deserves disdain and scorn; contemptuous describes that which expresses disdain and scorn, and also one who feels disdain and scorn; a contemptible trick will call forth contemptuous disapproval con-temp-tu-ous (kŏn-tĕmp'tū-ŭs), adj. showing scorn; disdainful; scornful.—adv. con-temp'tu-ous-ly.—n. con-temp'tu-ous-ness.

Syn. arrogant, haughty, insolent. (See contemptible.)

con-tend (kŏn-tĕnd'), v.i. [< Lat. cum, with + tendere (tentus), to strive], 1, to exert oneself as an opponent or rival; 2, to dispute or debate:—v.t. to maintain or assert in argument.—n. con-tend'er.

Syn. contest, compete, oppose, struggle, combat.

[1]con-tent (kŏn'tĕnt; kŏn-tĕnt'), n. [< Lat. continēre (-tentus), to contain], 1, all that which is contained, as in a vessel, bundle, book, etc.: usually pl.; 2, the signification, subject matter, or meaning, as of a sermon or thesis; 3, extent; capacity, as for holding; size: usually pl.; 4, quantity contained.

[2]con-tent (kŏn-tĕnt'), adj. [O.F. < Lat. contentus, satisfied < continēre, to contain], 1, satisfied with one's lot, whatever it is; easy of mind and heart; 2, willing: used in the British House of Lords for aye:—v.t. to satisfy; gratify; appease:—n. 1, the state of being satisfied; ease of mind and heart; satisfaction; 2, the cause of satisfaction.

con-tent-ed (kŏn-tĕn'tĕd), p.adj. gratified; pleased with things as they are; satisfied; willing.—adv. con-tent'ed-ly.—n. con-tent'ed-ness.

Syn. happy, pleased, satisfied, resigned, willing.

TYPICAL EUROPEAN COSTUMES FROM THE FIRST TO THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

THE HISTORY OF COSTUME

TO study the evolution of costume is to follow one phase of developing civilization. Dress may be studied among primitive and savage peoples; but dress considered as costume belongs to civilized races. Our pictures cannot show more than a few examples of representative European dress in certain distinctive periods, striking a medium between the extreme elaboration of the rich, and the extreme plainness of the dress of the employed classes.

Roman dress under the Empire (I) was the final step in the development of classical costume. Brutus, the friend of Cæsar, must have gone clothed in the tunic and toga of white wool, silk, or linen, the purple border indicating his patrician birth. His wife, Portia, was entitled to the four colors pictured; a peasant woman could wear but one; while the empress might wear seven. The several tunics were looped up so that one showed below another.

Among the barbarian tribes which gradually conquered the Roman Empire (IV), Roman styles of dress had already exerted an influence. The warrior now combined with his native warm, close-fitting breeches and sleeves the Roman tunic, perhaps worn over his coat of mail. His Celtic or Germanic wife adopted the Roman woman's tunics, the sleeves of one showing beneath the body of the other, and the girdle, adjusted to make the waist long or short. The cold northern climate dictated the use of woolen stuffs like felt or camlet. Dress of the general style pictured in IV persisted until the period of the Crusades.

From the century of the Norman Conquest of England on through the Crusades and down to the early Renaissance, costume followed more or less the styles pictured as belonging to the eleventh century (XI). Squire, knight, noble,or prince had to be equipped for fighting. His costume is familiar to us as that of the knight of chivalry, the tunic and hose of the courtier combining with the armor of the soldier. So may have dressed the traditional knights of the Round Table, while their Enids and Elaines may have worn the simple, graceful, but richly embroidered gown and mantle that now were made of the costly silks and velvets brought from the Orient by Crusaders.

As time passed elaboration grew. New and lovely materials appeared as trade with the East developed—samite and sendal for beauty, fustian and serge for use. By the early Renaissance (XV), ladies were wearing the tight waist, the skirt full from the hips, the long train, the high headdress and veil. Their gallants appeared in long trunk hose, sometimes party-colored, and in doublets with sleeves. These styles were Italian, like the new art and literature. Any of the lords and ladies of Shakespeare's Italian plays—Romeo, Orsino, Olivia, Katharine—might have looked as do the pair in the picture.

Elizabethan costume (XVI) is familiar. For men, the new features are the hat with a brim, the hose from waist to foot, and the cape-like cloak; for women, the tight bodice and the farthingale, ancestor of the hoop skirt in all its forms; for both, the ruff. Sir Walter Raleigh or Lord Leicester might in such garb attend the court lady of the picture, with her fashionable fur sleeves and Mary Queen of Scots cap.

In the seventeenth century (XVII) came the costume, based on Spanish fashions, which the "Three Musketeers" of Dumas has made familiar to the eye: high boots, loose breeches instead of trunk hose, a jacket, and the broad hat with its drooping feather. The ruff disappears, and both sexes wear the wide lace or embroidery collar. Women's dress was marked by a low neck, a tight bodice laced to a point in front, a bell-shaped skirt with a draped overdress. In such a costume Lorna Doone may have appeared at court in London.

A radical change came (XVIII) when men appeared at the court of Queen Anne in a long coat and waistcoat, with tight knee breeches, silk stockings, and buckled shoes. The ruffled shirt and the periwig completed the new courtier, or perhaps he wore his hair powdered and queued. As the gentleman's contour grew slimmer, the lady's widened. Hoop skirts with panniers or long overdress, a tiny pointed bodice, and a very low-cut neck were topped off by a towering headdress. In such a dress Beatrix received the hopeless addresses of Henry Esmond.

The French Revolution brought simplicity. The Directory and Empire styles, originating in France, called for a cocked hat and long-tailed coat for men (not pictured), and a long, loose, simple, short-waisted gown, a poke bonnet or a turban, and a scarf, for women (XIX). Jane Austen's heroines, Elizabeth, Emma, and the rest, followed the styles set by the Empress Josephine. A little later, Beau Brummel, the English arbiter of fashion, worked the most radical change ever known in men's dress, making universal and permanent the conventions of short, unpowdered hair, long trousers, a tailed coat, and the use of dark colors for coat and vest.

About 1825 (last picture) the hoop skirt returned for a half-century run; and the frock coat, not yet discarded today, made its appearance. While men's dress thereafter, with slight variations, remained static, women's ran the gamut of hoop and crinoline and bustle, flounce and ruffle and drapery. Only at the end of the nineteenth century, when athletics and business and professional occupations began to alter women's activities, did woman's dress cease to veer back and forth with fashion, and became, as man's has always been, related to the practical realities of life.

crit-i-cism (krit′i-sizm), n. 1, the act or art of judging and defining something, particularly a literary or artistic work, according to certain standards, to render an opinion as to its merits or lack of them; an article, remark, or review containing such a judgment; a critique; 2, an acute judgment; especially, a disapproving judgment; censure; 3, the principles or method of judging the quality or soundness of a work of art, a hypothesis, etc.; 4, the scientific investigation of the origin, history, etc., of literary documents, especially of the Bible; textual examination.

Syn. comment, disapproval, animadversion, reflection, stricture. An animadversion is a censorious remark or statement, usually unreasonably faultfinding, and, because it is personal, often ill-natured and unjust. A criticism is an expression of judgment following careful examination; the judgment may be favorable or unfavorable, and it is made explicit by setting forth the virtues or blemishes which scrutiny has revealed. As here compared, criticism is usually unfavorable; as, his carping criticisms robbed her of self-confidence. A stricture is an expression of severe criticism, either vehement and rancorous, as the railings of one political leader against another, or judicious, as critical notes appended to an essay. A reflection is a casting of blame or censure, by aspersion, innuendo, implication, etc. A comment is an explanatory or critical remark, or series of remarks, as on some passage in a poem, or on some affair of ordinary experience. It involves judgment, not necessarily unfavorable, and is often the fruit of serious thought.

Syn., v. entice, ensnare, entrap, inveigle, lure.

de-coy duck 1, a tame or imitation duck used to attract wild fowl; 2, hence, a person who entraps others, as in swindling schemes.

de-crease (dē-krēs'), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -creased (-krēst'), p.pr. -creasing], [< O.F. decreistre < Lat. de, from + crescere, to grow], to grow less; diminish; dwindle; abate:—v.t. to cause to grow less; reduce gradually in size or extent:—n. (dē'krēs; dē'krēs), 1, a gradual lessening or decay; 2, the amount or degree of lessening: Obs., the wane of the moon.

Syn., v. abate, lessen, reduce, decline, dwindle, diminish, slacken, mitigate, ebb, curtail, wane. To decrease is to become less or fall off, especially by an inner or natural process; as, winter days decrease in length until December 21. Decrease also has the meaning to make less; as, the nurse decreased the dose. To abate is to grow less, especially in violence or vigor; as, anger, the storm, a quarrel, abates; the waters abated; abate has also the meaning to bring down, as in degree, force, etc.; as, to abate unhappiness, pride; or, in legal language, to put an end to; as, to abate a nuisance. Lessen (the more familiar term) and diminish mean to become less in size, number, or quantity; as, his responsibilities lessened with age; the importance of royalty has diminished. Both these words also have the meaning to make less; as, the cyclist lessened his speed; war diminishes the male population. To dwindle is to shrink or waste away, or to disappear gradually; as, Rip Van Winkle's "estate had dwindled away under his management."

de-cree (dē-krē'), n. [< O.F. decré < Lat. decretum, a thing decided], 1, an ordinance, law, or edict; 2, the award of an umpire or arbitrator: Theol., an established purpose of God; Law, a judicial decision of a lawsuit: especially used by courts of equity:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -creed (-krēd'), p.pr. -creeing], to determine by a law, decision, etc.; ordain; assign:—v.i. to make a law, decision, etc.; determine.

ded-i-ca-to-ry (dĕd'ĭ-kā-tō-rĭ), adj. pertaining to, or serving as, an act of consecration.

de-duce (dē-dūs'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -duced (-dūst'), p.pr. -ducing], [< Lat. de, from + ducere (ductus), to lead], to gather by reasoning; infer; to derive (a truth or conclusion) from principles already known: with from or out of.—adj. de-duc'i-ble.

de-duct (dē-dŭkt'), v.t. to take away; subtract: used of numbers, sums, or the like; as, to deduct 20 from 100: Rare, 1, to deduce; 2, to set forth in order; relate.—adj. de-duct'i-ble.

de-duc-tion (dē-dŭk'shŭn), n. 1, the act or process of taking away; subtraction; 2, that which is taken away; 3, the drawing of conclusions by a process of reasoning from accepted general principles; also, a conclusion thus reached; an inference.

Syn. induction. Deduction names that form of reasoning which proceeds from the general to the particular. Deduction works from a general principle through a special case, adduced as an instance of the principle, to a conclusion. If the general principle is true, and if the instance cited actually does fall under this principle, the conclusion arrived at is true, as in a geometrical demonstration. Induction names that form of reasoning which proceeds from the particular to the general. It is the type employed in the formulation of general laws and principles. Many instances, critically examined, are observed to point through some common characteristic to a certain conclusion. If the instances are numerous enough, and the common characteristic is unfailing, the conclusion is probably true, though, as in the case of a natural law, it is impossible to assert that every instance in the universe has been adduced. As compared to a conclusion reached by deduction, therefore, a conclusion reached by induction is only probable. (See conclusion.)

de-duc-tive (dē-dŭk′tĭv), adj. 1, tending to take away; 2, designating, or pertaining to, reasoning which draws a specific conclusion from an accepted general principle.—adv. de-duc′tive-ly.

de-fend (dē-fĕnd′), v.t. [<O.F. defendre<Lat. de, from+fendere, to ward off], 1, to guard or protect from harm or violence; 2, to maintain or uphold, as one's legal rights, by force of argument or evidence; contest, as a suit:—v.i. Law, to make a defense in court.—n. de-fend′er.

Syn. protect, preserve, guard, keep, cover, shelter, screen, shield, vindicate, maintain, save, justify. As here compared, to defend is ordinarily to drive away an enemy who is actually assaulting; to guard is to stand ready to fend off actual attack, to shield from threatened harm, or merely to keep in safety. Soldiers defend their country in time of war; they guard our coasts in time of peace; we guard against the spread of a contagious disease; we guard valuable possessions. To protect is to shield either from actual or possible harm; adults protect children; we protect ourselves from cold. To preserve is to keep from harm; as, God preserve us from evil! We have preserved George Washington's Mount Vernon home; we preserve fruits for winter use. Keep in the sense of defend implies that the defense, as of a fortress, has been successful.

de-fend-ant (dē-fĕn′dănt), adj. defending:—n. Law, one who is sued or accused.

de-fense (dē-fĕns'), n. [< O.F. defens < Lat. defendere (-fensus), to ward off], 1, the act of guarding; state of being guarded; protection; 2, a person or thing that protects or defends; 3, that which justifies; vindication: Law, 1, an answer in court opposing or denying a charge or suit; 2, the cause of the defendant; also, the means or procedure used to contest the suit; 3, the counsel on the defending side in a suit; 4, knowledge or skill to protect oneself or resist attack. Also, de-fence'.—adj. de-fense'less.

Syn. rampart, bulwark, vindication, excuse, plea.

de-fen-si-ble (dē-fĕn'sĭ-bl), adj. 1, capable of being protected; 2, justifiable, as an act or opinion.—n. de-fen'si-bil'i-ty.—n. de-fen'si-ble-ness.

de-fen-sive (dē-fĕn'sĭv), adj. 1, serving to guard, or protect; 2, carried on for protection; 3, in a condition of making defense:—n. the act, state, or means of defense.—adv. de-fen'sive-ly.

[1]de-fer (dē-fûr'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ferred (-fûrd'), p.pr. -ferring], [< O.F. differer < Lat. dis-, apart+ferre, to carry], to put off to a future time; delay; postpone; leave undone:—v.i. to procrastinate.

Syn. delay, postpone, procrastinate, retard, detain, hinder, prorogue, adjourn. Delay, procrastinate, defer, and postpone agree in the idea of putting off. To delay is to put off beginning, to dally along without action, usually through some fault of the delayer such as laziness or indecision. To delay may or may not be culpable; to procrastinate usually is. To procrastinate is to put off doing that which really should be done—through neglect, laziness, or some allied fault. One who delays may act sometime; one who procrastinates is apt never to act. To defer and to postpone are to put off until another time—the time may or may not be specifically mentioned, but the intention to resume the matter in hand is always implied, defer being the more general in sense. Thus we defer making certain calls; we postpone discussions until the next meeting; a storm may cause us to postpone a trip.

[2]de-fer (dē-fûr'), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -ferred (-fûrd'), p.pr. -ferring], [< O.F. deferer < Lat. de, down+ferre, to carry], to yield; give in; as, I defer to you:—v.t. to refer; submit for decision.—n. de-fer'rer.

def-er-ence (dĕf'ẽr-ẽns), n. [see [2]defer], a yielding to the opinions or wishes of another; regard; courteous submission; respect.

Syn. respect, veneration, reverence, regard. Deference is a courteous regard or submission to those whose age, position, or ability demands such recognition from us. Deference may not indicate agreement or preference on our part. Respect is a feeling of honor and genuine appreciation tendered to a person or quality honestly deserving of it. Respect may or may not be attended by affection or agreement.

def-er-ent (dĕf'ẽr-ẽnt), adj. 1, [see [1]defer], fitted for carrying away; efferent: opposite of afferent; 2, [see [2]defer], respectful; deferential.

def-er-en-tial (dĕf'ẽr-ẽn'shăl), adj. expressing regard for the wishes of another; respectful.—adv. def'er-en'tial-ly.

de-fi-ant (dē-fī'ănt), adj. full of, or expressing, hostile resistance; challenging opposition; insolently disobedient.—adv. de-fi'ant-ly.

de-fi-cien-cy (dē-fĭsh'ẽn-sĭ), n. [pl. -cies (-sĭz)], [see deficient], the state of being incomplete; failure; also, deficit.—n. Rare, de-fi'cience.

de-fi-cient (dē-fĭsh'ẽnt), adj. [< Lat. deficiens (-entis), lacking], incomplete; defective.

Syn. short, insufficient, inadequate, scanty, lacking.

def-i-cit (dĕf'ĭ-sĭt), n. [Lat., = it is lacking], a shortage or deficiency, especially of money, income, or resources as compared with expenditures or with what should be on hand: opposite of surplus.

de-fi-er (dē-fī'ẽr), n. [see defy], one who refuses to obey; as, a defier of the law.

def-i-lade (dĕf'ĭ-lād'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -laded, p.pr. -lading], [< Fr. défiler, to unthread], Mil., to arrange the lines of (a fortress) so as to protect it from cross fire or fire from the rear.

[1]de-file (dē-fīl'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -filed (-fīld'), p.pr. -filing], [< O.F. defouler, to trample < Lat. de- (intensive)+fullo, fuller: from the treading on cloth in fulling, or whitening], 1, to make foul or impure; desecrate; 2, to corrupt.—n. de-file'ment.—n. de-fil'er.

Syn. soil, pollute, contaminate, violate.

[2]de-file (dē-fīl'), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -filed (-fīld'), p.pr. -filing], [< Fr. défiler, to unthread; file off < de, away+filer, to spin < Lat. filum, a thread], to march off in a line or in files:—n. (dē-fīl'; dē'fīl), 1, a long, narrow pass, as between mountains; 2, a marching in line.

de-fine (dē-fīn'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -fined (-fīnd'), p.pr. -fining], [< O.F. definer < Lat. definire (-itus) < de- (intensive)+finire, to end or limit], 1, to fix the limits of; 2, to state the exact meaning of; explain.—adj. de-fin'a-ble.—n. de-fin'er.

Syn. fix, settle, limit, prescribe, interpret, expound.

def-i-nite (dĕf'ĭ-nĭt), adj. 1, precise; exact; 2, having fixed or clear limits: definite article, Gram., the word the: so called because it limits, restricts, or particularizes the application of the word it modifies.—adv. def'i-nite-ly.—n. def'i-nite-ness.

de-sign (dē-zīn'), v.t. [< Fr. désigner < Lat. designare, to mark < de- (intensive) + signum, a sign], 1, to sketch, mark, or plan out; to plan and make a preliminary sketch of (a work of art or the like); 2, to plan and draw in detail, indicating the method of construction, as a house or bridge; 3, to project; set apart mentally, or intend, for a special purpose; as, his conciliatory manner was designed to disarm suspicion; 4, to purpose; intend: Obs., to appoint; indicate:—v.i. to make decorative plans or execute original work:—n. 1, an outline, plan, or drawing; 2, project; intention; 3, the art of planning, drawing, etc.; also, the finished work; 4, the arrangement of details according to a plan.

Syn., n. sketch, delineation, intent, purpose, plan, intention, end, aim, object. A design is a preconceived notion of something to be done; it embraces not only the thing itself, but a method of accomplishing it with the means at hand; designs can be noble or artful, open or scheming. A plan is the detailed method by which a design, purpose, etc., is worked out. A plan should be practicable. A purpose is a thing resolutely and steadfastly proposed to the mind: it is usually definite, and depends for its accomplishment largely on the character of the proposer. An intention is also a thing proposed to the mind, but it may be vague as well as fixed, and its execution often turns upon circumstances as well as upon the character of the intender. Intent, though the equivalent of intention, is more formal, and is used chiefly as a legal, a poetical, or a philosophical term. To convict an accused man of first-degree murder it must be proved that he had the intent to kill. An end is the purpose one has in view, regarded as the natural termination of the work involved. An object is the thing one is planning to get, or the consummation desired. An aim is that toward which our efforts are directed, regarded as a focusing point not to be lost sight of, like a target.

des-ig-nate (dĕz'ĭg-nāt; dēz'ĭg-nāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -nated, p.pr. -nating], 1, to indicate by marks, lines, or a description, the limits of;

point out; distinguish; specify; 2, to name; 3, to nominate or appoint.—adj. des'ig-na-tive.—n. des'ig-na'tor.
Syn. specify, show, entitle, denominate, particularize.

des-ig-na-tion (dĕs'ĭg-nā'shŭn; dĕz'ĭg-nā'shŭn), n. 1, the act of naming or pointing out; 2, a distinctive mark or title; 3, appointment.

Syn. expedient, advisable, acceptable, proper, advantageous.—Ant. inadvisable, injudicious, displeasing.

de-sire (dē-zīr'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -sired (-zīrd'), p.pr. -siring], [<O.F. desirer<Lat. desiderare, to long for], 1, to wish earnestly for; crave; 2, to signify a wish for; ask for; entreat or command; as, the king desired of him that he should return:—n. 1, an earnest wish; craving; 2, the object longed for; 3, a petition or prayer; 4, passion; lust.—n. de-sir'er.
Syn., n. appetite, inclination, aspiration, wish, longing, yearning, craving, coveting. A wish is an eagerness to obtain or enjoy something; it is frequently directed toward the unattainable, or that which the wisher realizes to be beyond reason. Our tendency to indulge in vain wishes is epitomized in the proverb, "If wishes were horses, beggars might ride." Desire rises from a more vehement feeling than a wish, and has strength and intensity behind it; it is commonly directed toward that which by luck or effort can be obtained, but it often names a vague and unsatisfied craving; as, nothing could appease the man's desire for notoriety. Longing is ordinarily a stronger term than desire; it often emanates from the depths of one's nature, and has a touch of the imperious about it; as, his longing to educate his children dominated his life. Longing is directed toward that which is far off, but will come sometime; as, throughout the war-torn nations there spread a deep longing for peace. Appetite is used to express physical needs, as for food or drink, unless it is otherwise qualified, or used figuratively. Inclination expresses merely a tendency or a leaning; it does not connote either the definiteness or the warmth of the other words. Coreting is an improper desire directed toward that which belongs to another.—Ant., n. indifference, disinclination, apathy, antipathy.

de-sir-ous (dē-zīr'ŭs), adj. full of a wish or longing; solicitous; eager: often followed by of, or an infinitive with to.

de-sist (dē-zĭst'; dē-sĭst'), v.i. [<Lat. desistere, to stop<de, away+sistere, to put], to cease from action; stop; forbear: often followed by from.
Syn. cease, leave off, discontinue, quit, stop, abstain.—Ant. continue, persist, persevere, keep on, carry on.

dis-cov-er (dĭs-kŭv'ĕr), v.t. [dis- + cover], 1, to find out and make known the existence of, as something previously unknown; gain first knowledge of; 2, to catch sight of: Archaic, to bring to light; show; tell.—adj. dis-cov'er-a-ble.—n. dis-cov'er-er.

Syn. devise, invent, contrive, originate, ascertain, descry, detect. As here compared, to discover is to find out that which we did not know as a certainty before, or that which we did not know existed at all. We discover new lands, new methods of treating or preventing disease, facts in general, new means of accomplishing old acts, unsuspected merits, hidden defects, etc. To invent is to devise new means for doing things previously done otherwise. After the power of steam was discovered, the steam engine was invented. The possibility of communication by radio was first discovered; since then, scientists have worked to invent means of utilizing this method of communication. To contrive is to find a way to do a thing or accomplish a purpose by a clever use or adaptation of the means at hand; to contrive is to plan ingeniously in the face of difficulty. The Swiss Family Robinson contrived to use what raw material they could find.

dis-cov-er-y (dĭs-kŭv'ĕr-ĭ), n. [pl. -ies (-ĭz)], 1, a bringing to light; 2, the finding out and making known for the first time of something previously unknown; 3, a fact or truth found out and made known for the first time; disclosure.

dis-cred-it (dĭs-krĕd'ĭt), n. [dis- + credit], 1, lack of belief; distrust; 2, loss of reputation or financial good name; dishonor:—v.t. 1, to refuse to believe; 2, to dishonor; take away reputation from, or confidence in; as, science discredits his theories.

Syn., v. depreciate, decry, disgrace. (See disparage.)

dis-cred-it-a-ble (dĭs-krĕd'ĭt-ă-bl), adj. 1, harmful to reputation; 2, unworthy; shameful; disreputable.—adv. dis-cred'it-a-bly.

dis-cre-tion-a-ry (dĭs-krĕsh'ŭn-ă-rĭ), adj. controlled by individual judgment.

dis-crim-i-nate (dĭs-krĭm'ĭ-nāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -nated, p.pr. -nating], [<Lat. discrimen, distinction <dis-, apart + cernere, to sift], to distinguish; observe or mark the differences between:—v.i. to make a difference or distinction:—adj. (dĭs-krĭm'ĭ-nāt), 1, distinct; 2, showing judgment.—adv. dis-crim'i-nat"ing-ly.—adv. dis-crim'i-nate-ly.

Syn., v. differentiate, recognize, perceive. (See discern.)

dis-crim-i-na-tion (dĭs-krĭm"ĭ-nā'shŭn), n. 1, the power of distinguishing; faculty of nice or exact judgment; discernment;

2, a difference in treatment of two or more persons; distinction, usually unfair, in favor of one side.

Syn. acuteness, discernment, judgment, penetration, acumen, insight, distinction. These words express degrees and modes of seeing with the mind. A distinction is a mental recognition of a difference marking one object or quality from another; discrimination is a higher degree of the same power, producing subtler, more precise, more carefully estimated results. One may make a distinction by noting obvious, outward signs; discrimination requires comparison, and weighs motives, character, qualities. In social intercourse, the distinction between the fluent and the labored conversationalist is easy to observe; a just discrimination as to the relative merit of the men who so express themselves is more difficult. Discernment, like distinction, sees and marks differences, but it is akin to discrimination in that it compares and estimates critically, though within a narrower range. It is sharply perceptive, however, and discovers characteristics, motives, realities, not patent to the dull or obtuse mind. Extraordinary discernment is penetration, which enters at lightning speed into the essence of a matter, uncovering that which is concealed. Acuteness is penetration exercised by an unusually sharp, capable, all-round intellect. Acumen names a high degree of intellectual capacity; it is penetrating, acute, and discerning. The business man of acumen has an intellect that is both pointed and comprehensive. Insight is discernment plus that intuitive sympathy that plumbs character at a glance. Judgment is a practical power of the mind which uses discernment, discrimination, insight, to arrive at conclusions as to the relations and values of things; it differs from all these other mental qualifications in that it creates independent decisions and courses of action based on what the others have previously discovered and compared. —Ant. dulness, obtuseness, stupidity, slowness.

dis-crim-i-na-tive (dĭs-krĭm'ĭ-nā-tĭv), adj. 1, showing exact judgment; penetrating; acute; 2, distinctively characteristic.

dis-dain-ful (dĭs-dān'fo͝ol), adj. contemptuous; scornful; haughtily superior.—adv. dis-dain'ful-ly.—n. dis-dain'ful-ness.

Syn. proud, supercilious, lofty. (See arrogant.)

dis-ease (dĭ-zēz'), n. [dis-+ease], 1, any departure from a state of health; 2, a disordered condition of mind or body marked by definite symptoms; malady; illness:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -eased (-zēzd'), p.pr. -easing], to cause disease in derange.

Syn., n. ailment, complaint, infirmity, disorder, sickness, malady, illness, indisposition, morbidity. In general, disease is any morbid state of the body; sickness is the state of being affected with disease; illness names any form of physical disorder; as, all her life she had been a prey to illness. Specifically, each word may name a particular morbid condition of the body; as, pneumonia is often a fatal disease; la grippe is a debilitating rather than a mortal sickness; of what illness did he die? Sickness and illness are practically synonymous in general usage, though the British usage restricts the term sickness to the condition of nausea. An ailment is a troublesome, lingering, even if slight, illness; an indisposition is always slight. A complaint may be a deep-seated malady, or it may be merely an indisposition or an ailment.

Syn., n. likeness, facsimile, replica, counterpart, copy, imitation, transcript. The duplicate of an object is an exact reproduction of that object, which has the force, service, or use of the original, as well as its appearance; as, he sent a duplicate of his diploma as evidence to the Board of Education. A facsimile is also an exact reproduction of an object, but only in appearance; as, a facsimile of Lincoln's letter to the mother who lost five sons in the war has been hung in many college halls. The difference between duplicate and facsimile is thus seen to be the difference between substance and shadow. A signature produced in facsimile has only the force of a picture; a signature produced in duplicate has legal force. A copy is made from an original, and attempts to be exactly like it; a copy made by any reproducing machine, as a mimeograph, is necessarily exact. An imitation is a reproduction consciously essayed as a copy; it falls so far short of its model sometimes as to be obviously inferior, though there are imitations so clever as to deceive the initiated. A counterpart is a person or thing exactly like another; it may be a facsimile, as in a picture, or it may be an accidental conformity of feature and appearance.

du-pli-ca-tion (dū″plĭ-kā′shŭn), n. 1, the act of making double; 2, the act of making a copy or copies; 3, a fold; 4, a copy; replica.

ECCENTRIC
A, eccentric disk; B, axis; C, strap.

Syn., adj. abnormal, peculiar, erratic, whimsical, strange, singular, odd, queer. Eccentric signifies off center, or aside from, a straight line. He is eccentric whose conduct deviates from the customary, whose actions are irregular; people living alone frequently fall into eccentric ways. Erratic is stronger than eccentric, and implies such a departure from the common course as to be unwise, if not blameworthy; as, his conduct was so erratic that people questioned his sanity. Strange means unknown or unusual; a strange country is foreign or alien; a strange house is not one's own, or is unfamiliar; a strange explanation is an unexpected one, creating a vague distrust; strange actions are unaccountable, and savor somewhat of the mysterious, and, hence, the undesirable. Odd means unmatched, uneven; it differs from eccentric in suggesting failure to fit in rather than departure from a type. An odd person never wants to do what anyone else does; an odd number is uneven, an odd glove, one that has no mate, an odd idea is unfavorably out of the ordinary. Singular applies strictly to an only thing of its kind; used of a person, it marks him as having a distinguishing trait that separates him from others; as, singular in his piety; singular in his dress. Applied to objects, customs, qualities, etc., it means unexampled, unconventional, unusual; as, a singular course for a mother to take; a singular departure from etiquette; a singular place. Quaer describes that which differs from the ordinary in an odd way; it sometimes connotes the abnormal and the creepy, and, not infrequently, the questionable; as, a queer noise; a queer, dark street.—Ant., adj. regular, ordinary, normal.

e-co-nom-i-cal (ē"kŏ-nŏm'ĭ-kăl; ĕk"ŏ-), adj. 1, sparing in outlay; prudent in expenditure; frugal; 2, pertaining to economics.—adv. e"co-nom'i-cal-ly.

Syn. provident, chary, frugal, thrifty, sparing, saving, prudent. Economical describes management that succeeds without waste; it indicates a purposeful and practical regulation of one's affairs. Economical is sometimes, however, synonymous with frugal, connoting a disposition to save whether it is necessary or not; in this sense, economical and frugal indicate a grudging expenditure which excludes luxuries, but provides necessities, though never in excess; hence, a frugal meal might be sufficient, though not abundant. Frugal people incline to the uncomfortable ways of saving, but thrifty people live well, manage cleverly, save intelligently, and bank on their continued health and earnings as a source of surplus, rather than upon too strict deprivation. Sparing people are grudging, sometimes actually stingy; one may be sparing of food, words, sympathy, comforts, and the like. Saving people are adepts at cutting corners; they are both frugal and economical, and put themselves to much trouble to save small amounts. Provident people manage their affairs as well as the economical, better than the frugal, often as comfortably as the thrifty; provident people look toward the future and bend the present, as wisely as possible, to serve that end. ed-i-to-ri-al (ĕd"ĭ-tō'rĭ-ăl), adj. of, pertaining to, or written by, an editor:—n. in a newspaper or magazine, a leading article; an article expressing the editor's opinions.—adv. ed"i-to'ri-al-ly.

E. D. S. abbr. English Dialect Society:—Eds., editors:—eds., editions:—educ., educator.

ed-u-cate (ĕd'ŭ-kāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -cated, p.pr. -cating], [< Lat. e, out + ducere, to lead], to develop, improve, or train, either through study and discipline or by contact, example, etc.; instruct.—adj. ed'u-ca-ble.—adj. ed'u-ca-tive (-kā-tĭv).

ed-u-ca-tion (ĕd"ŭ-kā'shŭn), n. 1, the training of the mental and moral powers, either by a system of study and discipline, or by the experiences of life; 2, the knowledge, training, or ability gained in either of these ways.—adj. ed"u-ca'tion-al.

Syn., instruction, breeding, training, culture, information, cultivation, knowledge, schooling. Education comprehends all that we assimilate from the beginning to the end of our lives in the development of the powers and faculties bestowed upon us at birth. It includes not only systematic schooling, but also that enlightenment and sense which an individual obtains through experience. Instruction is the knowledge and information given in a course of schooling or training. Training connotes not only the idea of knowledge received, but that of such knowledge digested through application, drill, and discipline. Culture is a state of advanced mental and moral development, accompanied by such fineness of feeling and taste, such social address and polished manners, as result from long contact with what is best. Breeding is the result of training, or the lack of it, in behavior and good manners. One well born and well trained, one schooled in the civilities of life has good breeding; one unused to social observances, or unaccustomed to extending the little but significant courtesies of social life has bad breeding. Culture often bespeaks the heritage of generations who have had the advantages of wealth and leisure; breeding suggests the home from which one comes.

ed-u-ca-tor (ĕd'ŭ-kā"tẽr), n. 1, one who teaches, develops, or trains others; a pedagog; 2, one who is an authority in the science of education.

e-duce (ē-dūs'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. educed (-dūst'), p.pr. educing], to draw out; infer; elicit.—adj. e-duc'i-ble.—adj. e-duc'tive (ē-dŭk'tĭv).

Syn. elicit, evoke, evolve, develop, deduce.

e-duct (ē'dŭkt), n. that which is elicited, evolved, or drawn forth: Chem., a substance separated from material in which it previously existed.

e-duc-tion (ē-dŭk'shŭn), n. 1, that which is developed or drawn out of something else; an inference or conclusion; 2, the process of inference.

ef-fa-ble (ĕf'ȧ-bl), adj. [< Lat. effabilis < ex, out + fari, to speak out], Archaic, capable of being expressed; utterable.

ef-face (ē-fās'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -faced (-fāst'), p.pr. -facing], [< Fr. effacer < Lat. ex, out + facies, face], 1, to wipe out or erase, as writing; cancel; 2, to reduce to insignificance.—n. ef-face'ment.

Syn. obliterate, expunge, blot out, eclipse. (See erase.)

ef-fect (ē-fĕkt'), v.t. [< Lat. efficere (-fectus) < ex, from + facere, to make], to bring about; accomplish; cause to happen:—n. 1, a resulting state or condition; the change made by some cause or agent; 2, a general impression made upon observers, as by a work of art or studied mannerisms; 3, meaning; import; as, to this effect he wrote; 4, actuality; fact; as, in effect; 5, working order; as, the rule went into effect: pl. movable goods; personal property.

Syn., n. consequence, issue, event, product, intent, performance, impression; v. produce, execute, perform, fulfil, discharge, accomplish, complete, administer. To effect is to make come to pass or bring to complete success a plan or purpose. Ordinarily we effect our own plans or designs. Effect commonly implies that the issue was brought about in spite of difficulties, and it stresses all that was done to that end, rather than the concluding or finishing act; as, after long years we effected the desired changes. To execute is to secure an actual and operating result by carrying a thing through; as, to make a law is easier than to execute it. We ordinarily execute the biddings of others, and the actual completion rather than the whole operation of securing the result is stressed. Legally, execute means to make valid by following the procedure established by law, or to complete, as a document, by a required signature. Perform is the less familiar word for do; it often connotes a long-continued or regularly recurring action or duty. We discharge that which rests upon us as a responsibility or an obligation. We accomplish what we fulfil or finish, often after conquering obstacles.

ef-fec-tive (ĕ-fĕk'tĭv), adj. 1, having the power to produce a definite result; efficient; 2, producing an impression of beauty; as, an effective picture; impressive; striking:—n. 1, a soldier fit for duty; 2, the available military force of a country.—adv. ef-fec'tive-ly.—n. ef-fec'tive-ness.

Syn., adj. operative, adequate, fruitful, competent, effectual, efficient, efficacious. That is effective which produces, or is adapted to produce, an effect; effective fire drills insure order in time of fire; effective laws are in operation; effective speeches produce the reactions which the speakers intended them to produce; speakers who achieve such results are themselves effective. That is effectual which answers its purpose; effectual carries the idea of final. Effectual measures taken to suppress a rebellion do suppress it; a nuisance against which effectual complaints have been made is abated. Effectual is not used of persons. Efficient describes a person or thing acting under inherent power or energy to the end of certain accomplishment; efficient is opposed to incompetent or incapable. An efficient executive creates a smoothly running organization; an efficient mechanical device does the work it was designed to do. That is efficacious which produces a desired result or effect; as, an efficacious remedy; an efficacious method of teaching. Efficacious is not used of persons.

ef-fec-tu-al (ĕ-fĕk'tū-ăl), adj. producing, or having the ability to produce, a desired result. —adv. ef-fec'tu-al-ly.—n. ef-fec'tu-al-ness.

Syn. (see effective).—Ant. useless, powerless, vain.

ef-fec-tu-ate (ĕ-fĕk'tū-āt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ated, p.pr. -ating], to bring to pass; effect.

ef-fem-i-na-cy (ĕ-fĕm'ĭ-nă-sĭ), n. [pl. -nacies (-sĭz)], [see effeminate], the quality of being like a woman; weakness; lack of manliness.

ef-fem-i-nate (ĕ-fĕm'ĭ-nāt), adj. [< Lat. ex, from + femina, woman], having the qualities or characteristics of a woman; delicate or unmanly:—v.t. (-nāt), [p.t. and p.p. -nated, p.pr. -nating], to make womanish; weaken; unman.—v.i. to become weak or womanish.—adv. ef-fem'i-nate-ly.

Syn., adj. finical, soft, womanish, voluptuous.

ef-fi-ca-cious (ĕf'ĭ-kā'shŭs), adj. [< Lat. efficax (-acis), efficient], producing, or capable of producing, a desired effect; as, an efficacious remedy.—adv. ef'fi-ca'cious-ly.—n. ef'fi-ca'cious-ness.

Syn. powerful, sure, potent. (See effective.)

ef-fi-ca-cy (ĕf'ĭ-kă-sĭ), n. power to produce desired results or effects: usually applied to remedies, plans, or the like.

Syn. power, potency, strength.—Ant. powerlessness, impotence, fruitlessness, forcelessness.

ef-fi-cien-cy (ĕ-fĭsh'ĕn-sĭ), n. [see efficient], 1, the quality of producing the desired result or the maximum effect with the minimum effort or expense; capability; 2, the extent or quality of effectiveness: Phys., the ratio of the useful or available work obtained from a machine, electric system, or the like, to the energy supplied to it: efficiency wages, wages which are proportional to output.

Syn. competency, capability, power. (See ability.)

ef-fi-cient (ĕ-fĭsh'ĕnt), adj. [< Lat. efficiens (-entis), effecting], 1, producing or causing desired results; 2, capable; competent.—adv. ef-fi'cient-ly.

Syn. capable, competent, operative. (See effective.)

ef-fi-gy (ĕf'ĭ-jĭ), n. [pl. -gies (-jĭz)], [< Lat. effigies, a figure], an image or portrait, as a stuffed representation of a person, or a head on a medal.

ef-flo-resce (ĕf'lō-rĕs'), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -resced (-rĕst'), p.pr. -rescing], [< Lat. ex, out + florescere, to flourish], to blossom out: Chem., to change, either on the surface or throughout, to a powder, or powdery crust, usually whitish and crystalline, from decomposition by loss of the water of crystallization on being exposed to the air.

ef-flo-res-cence (ĕf'lō-rĕs'ĕns), n. Bot., 1, bloom; 2, the time or state of flowering; Med., a rash or eruption of the skin; Chem., the change to a powder, or powdery crust, usually whitish, on the surface or throughout certain materials, as salts, with the loss of crystalline structure through loss of the water of crystallization; also, the powder so formed.

ef-flo-res-cent (ĕf'lō-rĕs'ĕnt), adj. blossoming or flowering: Chem., 1, covered with, or decomposed into, a white, powdery substance through the action of evaporation or efflorescence; 2, forming, or capable of forming, such a surface.

ef-flu-ence (ĕf'lōō-ĕns), n. [see effluent], an issuing, or flowing out; emanation.—n. ef'flu-en-cy.

ef-flu-ent (ĕf'lōō-ĕnt), adj. [< Lat. effluens (-entis), flowing out], flowing or issuing forth:—n. that which flows forth or emanates, as a stream that flows out of a lake or another stream.

ef-flu-vi-al (ĕ-flōō'vĭ-ăl), adj. [see effluvium], pertaining to invisible, ill-smelling vapor, especially that which comes from decaying matter.

ef-flu-vi-um (ĕ-flōō'vĭ-ŭm), n. [pl. -via (-ă)], [Lat. = a flowing out], an invisible vapor or exhalation, especially a disagreeable odor, as one coming from decaying matter.

ef-flux (ĕf'lŭks), n. [see effluence], 1, the act of flowing out; 2, that which flows out: outflow.

ef-fort (ĕf'ŏrt; ĕf'ĕrt), n. [Fr. < efforcer, force; try < L.L. ex, from + fortiare, to use force < Lat. fortis, strong], 1, severe exertion, either physical or mental, made for a definite end; attempt; 2, something produced or achieved by conscious exertion, as a literary or artistic production; an achievement.

Syn. attempt, trial, struggle, exertion, endeavor, essay, labor. Effort names the putting forth of power or strength, either physical or mental, in doing or struggling to do a certain definite thing. Attempt emphasizes the idea of trying to accomplish an end. The purpose under effort and attempt is the same, but effort looks toward success, while attempt admits the possibility of failure, since an attempt is an avowed experiment; hence, one definition of attempt is "an unsuccessful effort." Both effort and attempt name a single act; endeavor connotes a chain of activities; endeavor is a continuous attempt, directed as a rule toward that which is hard to conquer, renewed in spite of failure, and sustained by a firm purpose; as, patient endeavor to be cheerful in affliction. Exertion is a vigorous, taxing, even violent, exercise of any power or faculty; it may or may not be directed toward a definite object.

ef-front-er-y (ĕ-frŭn'tĕr-ĭ), n. [pl. -ies (-ĭz)], [< Lat. effrons (-ontis), shameless < ex, without + frons, forehead: modesty], impudence; boldness; shamelessness; undisguised arrogance.

Syn. audacity, presumption, assurance, brass, impudence.—Ant. diffidence, modesty, self-effacement.

ef-ful-gence (ĕ-fŭl'jĕns), n. [< Lat. effulgens (-entis), shining out], a great brightness; splendor; brilliancy; radiance.—adj. ef-ful'gent.—adv. ef-ful'gent-ly.

e-ject-ment (ē-jĕkt'mĕnt), n. the act of evicting or casting out: Law, 1, an action by which a contested title to the possession of real property is tried and decided; 2, the writ initiating this action.

[1]eke (ēk), adv. and conj. [< A.S. ĕac, also < O.Teut. source], Archaic, also.

[2]eke (ēk), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. eked (ēkt), p.pr. eking], [< obs. eche < A.S. ēcan, to increase < O.Teut. source], to piece out; supplement; obtain or produce with difficulty; especially, to contrive to make (a living) by one means or another: with out.

e-lab-o-rate (ē-lăb'ō-rāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -rated, p.pr. -rating], [< Lat. e, out+laborare (-atus), to work], to produce, develop, or improve in detail and with great care; change from a comparatively simple condition to a complicated or more finished condition; as, to elaborate a plan:—adj. (ē-lăb'ō-rāt), produced through study or minute exactness; highly wrought, as literary style; complicated: Colloq., overdecorated; fussy.—adv. e-lab'o-rate-ly.—n. e-lab'o-rate-ness.—adj. e-lab'o-ra-tive.

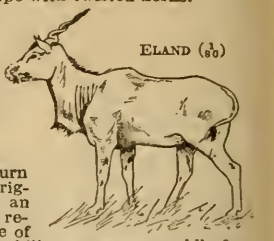
e-lab-o-ra-tion (ē-lăb"ō-rā'shŭn), n. 1, the act of producing or working out in detail and with care; 2, that which has been so produced; a carefully wrought development of a simple beginning.

E-laine (ē-lān'), n. [source uncertain], 1, in Arthurian romance, "the lily maid of Astolat," whose story is told in Tennyson's "Lancelot and Elaine"; 2, any of several other ladies of Arthurian romance.

E-lam-ite (ē'lăm-īt), n. [< Elam], an inhabitant of Elam, an ancient kingdom east of Babylonia, in the mountains between the Persian Gulf and the Caspian Sea (Gen. 14:1, 9; Dan. 8:2).

é-lan (ā'lăn'), n. [Fr. = a dash forward], vehemence; ardor; vivacity; an impetuous rush or outburst due to enthusiasm.

e-land (ē'lănd), n. [Du. = elk], Zoöl., a large South African antelope with twisted horns.



ELAND ($\frac{1}{60}$)

e-lapse (ē-lăps'), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. elapsed (ē-lăpst'), p.pr. elapsing], [< Lat. e, from+labi (lapsus), to glide], to slip or glide away: usually applied to the passing of time.

e-las-tic (ē-lăs'tĭk), adj. [< Gk. elastikos, propulsive], 1, having the power to return or spring back to its original size or form after an applied stress has been removed; springy; capable of extension; 2, having the ability to recover rapidly from a strained or depressed state; buoyant; 3, adaptable; as, an elastic standard of conduct: elastic limit, Engin. and Metal., the greatest stress of stretching, twisting, or bending that a material, as steel, is capable of undergoing without remaining permanently in altered shape: used to determine the stress to which a material can be subjected under conditions of safety, as in machinery or buildings: elastic tissue, Anat., a connective tissue made up of yellow elastic fibers: found in the middle coat of arteries, and, mixed with inelastic, or white, fibers, in ligaments, etc.:—n. a cord or narrow woven cloth made partly of India rubber, and capable of being stretched and springing back.—adv. e-las'ti-cal-ly e-las-tic-i-ty (ē"lăs-tĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. 1, the quality of being springy; the power to stretch and spring back; 2, the ability to recover from depression or gloom, or from any mental or physical shock.

e-late (ē-lāt'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. elated, p.pr. elating], [< Lat. e, out+latus, raised], to raise the spirits of; cause to feel happy or proud:—adj. spirited; exalted; proud.—p.adj. e-lat'ed.—adv. e-lat'ed-ly.

el-a-ter (ĕl'ȧ-tēr), n. [L.L. < Gk. elatēr, driver < elaunein, to drive], Bot., one of the long, elastic filaments found in various plants, as among the spores in the capsule of a liverwort, where they serve to scatter the spores; Entom., any of a family (Elateridæ) of beetles, especially of a genus (Elater) of this family, many of which are able to snap up with a clicking sound when laid on the back, thus righting themselves; snapping beetle, or click beetle.—adj. el-lat'er-oid.

el-a-te-ri-um (ĕl"ȧ-tē'rĭ-ŭm), n. [Lat. < Gk. elatērion, neut. of elatērios, driving], Mcd., the sharp, bitter, dried sediment from the juice of the squirting cucumber (Ecballium elaterium): used to stimulate bowel action and the secretion of urine.

e-la-tion (ē-lā'shŭn), n. a feeling of exultant happiness; excited joy or pride; exaltation.

el-bow (ĕl'bō), n. [< A.S. elnboga < eln, forearm +boga, a bend], 1, Anat., the joint between the forearm and the upper arm; also, the outer part or curve of this joint; hence, 2, any object in the shape of the bent arm, as a bent pipe connection:—v.t. to jostle or push, as with the elbows:—v.i. to force one's way rudely; as, to elbow through a crowd.

el-bow-room (ĕl'bō-rōōm"), n. [elbow+room], 1, plenty of space; 2, liberty or opportunity for unhampered activity.

eld (ĕld), n. [< A.S eldo, antiquity < ald, old], Archaic or Poet., 1, old age; 2, ancient times; antiquity.

[1]eld-er (ĕl'dĕr), adj. comp. of old, [< A.S. eldra < eald, old], older; prior in time, origin, or appointment; senior:—n. 1, one older or superior in age, rank, or station; 2, a leader or ruler of a tribe, family, or organization, as among the Jewish tribes of the Old Testament; 3, in the primitive Christian church, a governing officer of a local congregation: called in Greek a presbyter, of which word elder is a translation; 4, in certain Protestant churches, especially the Presbyterian, a governing officer.—n. eld'er-ship.

[2]el-der (ĕl'dĕr) n. [< A.S. ellærn, elder bush], 1, any of a genus (Sambucus) of the honeysuckle family, shrubs having large, compound, flattened clusters of white or pink flowers, and dark purple or red berries; 2, any of several plants resembling this shrub.

el-der-ber-ry (ĕl'dĕr-bĕr"ĭ), n. [pl. -ries (-ĭz)], [[2]elder+berry], the fruit of the elder.

eld-er-ly (ĕl'dĕr-lĭ), adj. [see [1]elder], rather old; beyond middle age; approaching old age.

eld-est (ĕl′dĕst), adj. superl. of old, [< A.S. eldesta < eald, old], oldest; first-born.

El Do-ra-do (ĕl dō-rä′dō), [pl. -does (-dōz)], [Sp. = the gilded], 1, a fabled country, very rich in gold and precious stones, sought in South America by adventurers of the 16th century; 2, hence, any place full of money-making opportunities.

el-dritch (ĕl′drĭch), adj. [source uncertain], ghastly; hideous; eerie; uncanny; weird.

El-e-at-ic (ĕl″ē-ăt′ĭk), adj. [< Lat. eleaticus, pertaining to Elea, a Gk. town in southern Italy], designating, or pertaining to, a school of Greek philosophers of the sixth century B. C., which taught that the absolute alone exists, and that motion and change are apparent, but not real.

elec. abbr. 1, electrical; electrician; electricity; 2, electuary. Also, elect.

el-e-cam-pane (ĕl″ē-kăm-pān′), n. [corr. of L.L. inula campana, elecampane of the field], 1, a tall, stout, perennial herb (Inula helenium) of the composite family, having yellow flowers, large leaves, and a root from which a tonic is made; 2, a confection having the flavor of this root.

e-lect (ē-lĕkt′), v.t. [< Lat. e, from + legere (lectus), to choose], 1, to choose from among a number for any function or use; 2, to choose by vote for some office or position: Theol., to choose, by divine will, for eternal salvation:—adj. 1, chosen for office but not yet installed; as, the president elect; 2, taken in preference; Theol., chosen for salvation or special grace:—n. one who is favored or set apart: the elect, Theol., those chosen by divine will to eternal salvation; hence, Colloq., those belonging to an exclusive set.

Syn., v. cull, pick, prefer, choose, select. Choose is the general term. It means to take, by an act of the judgment and will, a thing or course from among those offered. We choose on the grounds of merit, convenience, service, or the like. Prefer means to feel an especial liking for one person, thing, or course, among several offered; we prefer what accords with our mode of life, or our tastes. Affections and inclinations sway preference; judgment determines choice. In buying a rug, we may prefer an Oriental, but if we cannot afford it, we choose a domestic. To select is to make a choice after carefully weighing and considering not only the merits of the objects, but also our own preferences concerning them. The government, when an investigation is necessary, will select men specially qualified to conduct it. Pick is used colloquially, as in the phrase pick out, in the sense of select. To elect is to choose by vote.

e-lec-tion (ē-lĕk′shŭn), n. 1, the act of choosing or selecting; choice; 2, the act of choosing a person for some office or position, as by ballot: Theol., the selection by divine will of certain individuals for eternal salvation; especially in Calvinistic doctrine.

e-lec-tion-eer (ē-lĕk″shŭn-ēr′), v.i. to canvass for votes in the interest of an individual or a party; work to win an election.

e-lec-tive (ē-lĕk′tĭv), adj. 1, appointed or filled by choice or selection, as a public officer or office; 2, optional, as a course of study; 3, pertaining to the right of choice; electoral:—n. in the United States, a course of study which a student may choose, in distinction from one which he is required to take.—adv. e-lec′tive-ly.—n. e-lec′tive-ness.

e-lec-tor (ē-lĕk′tẽr), n. 1, one lawfully qualified to vote; 2, in the United States, a member of the electoral college, a body of men chosen by the people every four years to elect the president and vice president; 3, one of the group of German princes and bishops who chose the emperor of the Holy Roman Empire.—adj. e-lec′to-ral (-tō-răl).

e-lec-to-ral col-lege in the United States a body of citizens, called electors, chosen by the voters of the individual States to elect a president and vice president, each State having as many electors as it has members in Congress.

e-lec-to-rate (ē-lĕk′-tō-rāt), n. 1, the whole body of persons entitled to vote; electors collectively; any division or district of voters; 2, formerly, the dignity or territory of one of the electoral princes of the Holy Roman Empire.

E-lec-tra (ē-lĕk′trȧ), n. [< Gk. ēlektron, amber, or elektōr, the sun], Gk. Myth., 1, a princess who induced her brother, Orestes, to kill their mother, Clytemnestra, for murdering their father, Agamemnon; 2, one of the Pleiades: see Pleiades.

e-lec-tric (ē-lĕk′trĭk), adj. [< Gk. ēlektron, amber: because first recognized form of electricity came from amber under friction], 1, relating to, containing, produced or generated by, electricity; charged with, operated by, producing or capable of producing electricity (which see); 2, figuratively, full of excitement; tense; sensational: electric eel, any of several South American fishes (family Gymnotidæ), related to the catfishes, about six feet long, able to give a severe electric shock: electric eye, a photoelectric cell; a cell or vacuum tube the electrical properties of which are affected by light, especially one in which light occasions an electric current: electric furnace, a furnace in which intense heat is generated by an electric arc or by resistance to an electric current:—n. 1, a substance, as glass or amber, which is a nonconductor of electricity, but is used to excite or store an electrical charge; 2, a trolley car or other vehicle operated by electricity.—adj. e-lec′tri-cal.—adv. e-lec′tri-cal-ly.

ELECTRICAL FIXTURES

1, fuse plug; 2, knife-blade fuse; 3, ferrule type fuse; 4, plug; 5, plug cap; 6, weatherproof keyless socket; 7, key socket; 8, chain-pull socket, threaded for shade holder; 9, three-way cluster; 10, plug with current tap; 11, two-way current tap; 12, wall switch, tumbler type; 13, pendent switch; 14, snap switch; 15, threaded shade holder; 16, clamp shade holder; 17, porcelain knob, solid; 18, porcelain knob, split; 19, porcelain insulating tube.

e-lec-tri-cian (ē-lĕk-trĭsh′ăn), n. 1, one who is skilled in the science or application of electricity; 2, one who makes, repairs, installs, or invents electrical appliances and equipment.

e-lec-tric-i-ty (ē-lĕk-trĭs′ĭ-tĭ), n. 1, an imponderable and invisible agency, capable under different circumstances of producing light, heat, chemical decomposition, and other physical phenomena; 2, the branch of physics dealing with electricity.

e-lec-tric steel steel made in an electric furnace: generally considered of better quality than Bessemer or open-hearth steel.

e-lec-tri-fi-ca-tion (ē-lĕk″trĭ-fĭ-kā′shŭn), n. 1, the act of charging with electricity; also, the state of being so charged; 2, the act, process, or method of installing electrical equipment; also, the whole installation and equipment required, as by a railway, for the use of electric motive power.

e-lec-tri-fy (ē-lĕk′trĭ-fī), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -fied (-fīd), p.pr. -fying], 1, to charge with electricity; act upon by means of electricity; 2, to fit for the use of electric power, as a railway; 3, to fill with sudden violent feeling; startle; thrill.

e-lec-tro-chem-ist (ē-lĕk″trō-kĕm′ĭst), n. [electro- (see electric) + chemist], one skilled in the science which treats of the production of electricity through chemical action, or of chemical changes produced through the action of electricity. —n. e-lec′tro-chem′is-try.—adj. e-lec′tro-chem′i-cal.

e-lec-tro-cute (ē-lĕk′trō-kūt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -cuted, p.pr. -cuting], [< electro- (see electric), by influence of execute], to put to death by an electric current, as a criminal: Colloq., to kill accidentally by an electric current.—n. e-lec′tro-cu′tion.

e-lec-trode (ē-lĕk′trōd), n. [electro- (see electric) + -ode (< Gk. hodos, way)], either pole or terminal of an electric apparatus, as of a voltaic cell, an electrolytic cell, or a vacuum tube, especially as used in effecting electrolysis: when positive, called anode; when negative, cathode.

e-lec-tro-de-pos-it (ē-lĕk′trō-dē-pŏz′ĭt), n. [electro- (see electric) + deposit], that which has been deposited by a current of electricity, as a thin layer of metal in electroplating: —v.t. to deposit, as a metal or other substance, from a chemical compound by means of electricity.—n. e-lec′tro-dep′o-si′tion (-dĕp′ō-zĭsh′ŭn; -dē′pō-).

e-lec-tro-dy-nam-ic (ē-lĕk′trō-dī-năm′ĭk; -dĭ-), adj. [electro- (see electric) + dynamic], pertaining to the study of electric currents or electricity in motion:—n.pl. used as sing. the science treating of the action of electric currents on one another, on themselves, and on magnets.

e-lec-tro-dy-na-mom-e-ter (ē-lĕk′trō-dī′-nă-mŏm′ē-tĕr; -dĭn′ă-), n. [electrodynamic + meter], an instrument for measuring the strength of an electric current by means of the attraction or repulsion mutually exerted by two coils of wire, through at least one of which passes the whole or a part of the current to be measured.

e-lec-tro-graph (ē-lĕk′trō-grăf), n. [electro- (see electric) + -graph (< Gk. graphein, to write)], 1, a curve produced by an instrument recording the force of electrical potential; 2, an electric device used in etching; 3, a device for sending pictures, maps, etc., by electricity; 4, a machine for preparing copper cylinders used in printing fabrics and wall papers; 5, a radiograph; an X-ray picture.—n. e-lec-trog′ra-phy.—adj. e-lec′tro-graph′ic.

e-lec-tro-ki-net-ics (ē-lĕk′trō-kī-nĕt′ĭks; -kĭ-nĕt′ĭks), n.pl. used as sing. [electro- (see electric) + kinetics], that branch of science which treats of electricity in motion: opposite of electrostatics.—adj. e-lec′tro-ki-net′ic.

e-lec-tro-lier (ē-lĕk′trō-lēr′), n. [< electro- (see electric), by influence of chandelier], a bracket or fixture for supporting electric lamps.

e-lec-trol-y-sis (ē-lĕk-trŏl′ĭ-sĭs), n. [electro- (see electric) + -lysis (< Gk. luein, to loose)], Elec., the decomposition of a chemical compound by means of an electric current.

e-lec-tro-lyte (ē-lĕk′trō-līt), n. Elec., a substance which will conduct electricity, or becomes a conductor when in solution, and undergoes chemical decomposition when an electric current is passed through it.—adj. e-lec′tro-lyt′ic (-lĭt′ĭk); e-lec′-tro-lyt′i-cal.—adv. e-lec′tro-lyt′i-cal-ly.

e-lec-tro-lyze (ē-lĕk′trō-līz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -lyzed (-līzd), p.pr. -lyzing], to produce chemical change, as decomposition, in (a substance) by an electric current; subject to electrolysis.

e-lec-tro-mag-net (ē-lĕk′trō-măg′-nĕt), n. [electro- (see electric) + magnet], a core of magnetizable substance, as soft iron, which is temporarily magnetized by the passage of an electric current through a coil of wire surrounding it, but loses its magnetism when the current stops: the essential feature of many forms of electrodynamic apparatus.—adj. e-lec′tro-mag-net′ic.

ELECTROMAGNET
A, carrying device attached to derrick or crane; B, electromagnet; C, contact plate; D, electrical feed cable.

e-lec-tro-mag-net-ism (ē-lĕk′trō-măg′nĕt-ĭzm), n. 1, magnetism produced by electric currents; 2, the science treating of the phenomena arising from the physical relations between electricity and magnetism, as shown in the development of magnetism by the electric current.

e-lec-tro-met-al-lur-gy (ē-lĕk′trō-mĕt′-ăl-ûr″jĭ), n. [electro- (see electric) + metallurgy], 1, the application of electricity to the separation of metals from their ores, and to their preparation for commercial use; 2, the application of metals in the arts through the use of electricity, as in electroplating.—adj. e-lec′tro-met′al-lur′gi-cal.

e-lec-trom-e-ter (ē-lĕk-trŏm′ē-tĕr), n. [electro- (see electric) + meter], an instrument for detecting and measuring electrical charges and differences of potential.

e-lec-tro-mo-tive (ē-lĕk″trō-mō′tĭv), adj. [electro- (see electric) + motive], 1, of or pertaining to the motion of electricity or the laws that govern it; 2, producing an electric current by reason of difference in potential: electromotive force, the force which so produces an electric current; difference in potential.—n. e-lec″tro-mo′tion.

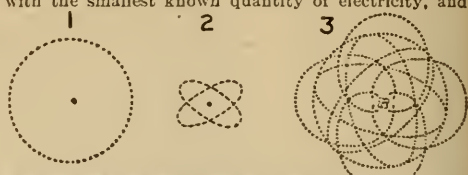
e-lec-tro-mo-tor (ē-lĕk″trō-mō′tĕr), n. [electro- (see electric) + motor], 1, a machine by which electrical energy is converted into mechanical energy through rotation produced by electromagnetic forces; an electric motor; 2, any apparatus for generating electricity, as a voltaic battery.

e-lec-tron (ē-lĕk′trŏn), n. [see electric], a minute negatively electrified particle charged with the smallest known quantity of electricity, and



ATOMIC STRUCTURE ACCORDING TO BOHR
Showing orbits of negatively charged electrons, within the atom, about central positive nuclei: 1, hydrogen atom, one electron; 2, helium, two electrons; 3, neon, ten electrons.

having a mass equal approximately to $\frac{1}{1850}$ of that of a hydrogen atom; the atom of negative electricity; also, any electrified atom or portion of an atom, whether positively or negatively charged: Metal., a strong, light alloy of magnesium, zinc, and copper: electron tube, a vacuum tube.—adj. e-lec-tron′ic.

e-lec-tro-neg-a-tive (ē-lĕk″trō-nĕg′ă-tĭv), adj. [electro- (see electric) + negative], 1, negatively charged; appearing at the positive electrode, or anode, as an element in a compound undergoing electrolysis; 2, having the property of becoming negatively electrified by contact with, or the chemical action of, another substance.

e-lec-tro-pa-thol-o-gy (ē-lĕk″trō-pă-thŏl′ō-jĭ), n. [electro- (see electric) + pathology], the study of pathologic, or morbid, conditions of the body, by electrical means.

e-lec-trop-a-thy (ē-lĕk-trŏp′ă-thĭ), n. [electro- (see electric) + -pathy (< Gk. pathos, suffering)], Med., the use of electricity in treating disease.—adj. e-lec″tro-path′ic.

e-lec-tro-phor-e-sis (ē-lĕk″trō-fō-rē′sĭs), n. [electro- (see electric) + -phoresis (< Gk. -phoros < pherein, to bear)], Elec., the movement, toward one or the other of the electrodes, of the particles of a colloid in suspension in a liquid through which an electric current is passing.

e-lec-troph-o-rus (ē-lĕk-trŏf′ō-rŭs), n. [pl. -ri (-rī)], Elec., a simple apparatus for generating static electricity by induction, consisting of a plate of metal and one of shellac or similar material.

e-lec-tro-plate (ē-lĕk′trō-plāt″), v.t. [electro- (see electric) + plate], to cover with a thin coating of metal, as silver, nickel, gold, etc., by means of electrolysis:—n. an article thus coated: commonly applied to silver-plated articles.

e-lec-tro-plat-ing (ē-lĕk′trō-plāt″ĭng), n. the process or art of depositing a smooth film or coating of metal upon a metal or other material in a bath of a solution of a metallic salt, by passing through the solution a current of electricity.

e-lec-tro-pos-i-tive (ē-lĕk″trō-pŏz′ĭ-tĭv), adj. [electro- (see electric) + positive], Elec., 1, appearing at the negative electrode, or cathode, as a constituent in a compound undergoing electrolysis; 2, assuming positive potential when in contact with, or chemically acted on by, another substance, as the zinc plates in a voltaic cell.

e-lec-tro-scope (ē-lĕk′trō-skōp), n. [electro- (see electric) + -scope (< Gk. skopein, to look)], Elec., an apparatus for showing the presence of an electric charge, or for determining its sign, whether positive or negative.—adj. e-lec″tro-scop′ic.

e-lec-tro-stat-ic (ē-lĕk″trō-stăt′ĭk), adj. [electro- (see electric) + static], pertaining to electricity at rest or to electric charges:—n.pl. used as sing. that branch of science that treats of static electricity, as the mutual attractions or repulsions of electrified bodies, the measurement and distribution of charges, etc.: opposite of electrokinetics.

e-lec-tro-ther-a-peu-tic (ē-lĕk″trō-thĕr″ə-pū′-tĭk), adj. [see electrotherapy], pertaining to the use of electricity as a curative agent:—n.pl. used as sing. the use of electricity in the treatment of disease; electrotherapy.

e-lec-tro-ther-a-py (ē-lĕk″trō-thĕr′ə-pĭ), n. [electro- (see electric) + therapy], the use of electricity in the treatment of disease, or as a curative agent; electrotherapeutics.

e-lec-tro-type (ē-lĕk′trō-tīp), n. [electro- (see electric) + type], a metal copy of a surface, as of a coin, an engraved or etched plate, the face of type matter locked up in a chase, or the like, made by depositing upon it by electrolysis a thin shell of metal, usually copper, and backing up this shell with type metal: used extensively in printing:—v.t. to make such a copy of.—n. e-lec′tro-typ″er.

e-lec-trum (ē-lĕk′trŭm), n. [see electric], 1, an ancient alloy or mixture of metals, as of gold and silver; 2, an alloy of copper, nickel, and zinc; nickel silver, or German silver: Obs., amber.

e-lec-tu-a-ry (ē-lĕk′tū-ā-rĭ), n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], [< L.L. electuarium < Gk. ekleikton, electuary < ekleikhein, to lick up], Med., a confection made by mixing a powdered drug with honey or sirup.

el-ee-mos-y-na-ry (ĕl″ē-mŏs′ĭ-nā-rĭ; ĕl″ē-ē-), adj. [< Gk. elecēmosunē, alms], 1, pertaining to alms; 2, devoted to, or given for, charitable purposes; charitable; 3, dependent on charity:—n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], one who receives alms.

el-e-gance (ĕl′ē-găns), n. [see elegant], 1, studied refinement; polish; grace or beauty resulting from perfect propriety; 2, anything essentially refined, or in good taste.—n. el′e-gan-cy.

el-e-gant (ĕl′ē-gănt), adj. [< Lat. elegans (-antis), elegant], 1, having as an essential quality grace, refinement, or beauty; tasteful; luxurious; 2, characterized by a nice, sometimes a studied, sense of refinement, propriety, or beauty; keenly appreciative of social amenities; free from coarseness: Colloq., excellent; first-rate.—adv. el′e-gant-ly.

Syn. dainty, tasteful, graceful. (See exquisite.)

e-le-gi-ac (ē-lē′jĭ-ăk; ĕl″ē-jī′ăk), adj. [see elegy], 1, like or pertaining to a funeral song; mournful; 2, written in the verse form used for classical Latin and Greek elegies, consisting of couplets in dactylic hexameter and pentameter:—n. 1, a mournful song or poem; elegy; 2, a poem written in the verse form used chiefly for elegies in ancient classic literature.—adj. el″e-gi′a-cal (-jī′ə-kăl).

el-e-gize (ĕl′ē-jīz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -gized (-jīzd), p.pr. -gizing], to write mournfully about; bewail; lament:—v.i. to write a mournful song or poem.—n. el′e-gist (ĕl′ē-jĭst).

el-e-gy (ĕl′ē-jĭ), n. [pl. -gies (-jĭz)], [< Fr. élégie < Gk. elegos, a mournful poem], 1, a mournful poem; a funeral song; used loosely of merely serious or reflective poems; 2, a poem written in elegiac meter.

el-e-ment (ĕl′ē-mĕnt), n. [O.F. < Lat. elementum, a first principle], 1, a simple component of a more complicated whole; ingredient; 2, a first or main principle; specifically, one of the four main parts of the physical world (earth, fire, air, and water) thought by ancient and medieval philosophers to be the entire composition of the universe: now used only in speaking of the atmospheric forces, especially in describing a storm; as, the elements raged for hours; 3, natural environment, or the life with which one is familiar: Chem., any of a number of substances or kinds of matter, of which at present about ninety are known, which are not decomposable by ordinary methods of chemical analysis, and from combinations of which all compounds are formed: supposed in some cases, however, in the light of recent researches, to be composed of still more elementary substances, or to be transformable by electric or other forces into other substances formerly thought elementary (see table, page 315); Math., 1, one of the terms of an algebraic expression; 2, the straight line conceived as forming or generating a conic or other surface, and called the generatrix, in any specified position, or considered as a part of the surface: pl. 1, the first steps in any branch of knowledge or art; rudiments; 2, the sacramental bread and wine.

el-e-men-tal (ĕl″ē-mĕn′tăl), adj. 1, pertaining to one of the four elements; hence, pertaining to first principles; primal; fundamental; 2, relating to, or characteristic of, the physical universe or the forces of nature; 3, forming an essential part of something; Chem., pertaining to an element or elements.—adv. el″e-men′tal-ly.

el-e-men-ta-ry (ĕl″ē-mĕn′tə-rĭ), adj. pertaining to first principles; introductory; simple: Chem., never having been analyzed, decomposed, or formed by combination of simpler substances; Education, pertaining to the earlier years of school work.—adv. el″e-men′ta-ri-ly.—n. el″e-men′ta-ri-ness.

el-e-phant (ĕl′ē-fănt), n. [< O.F. olifant < Lat. elephantus < Gk. elephas (-antos), elephant], 1, a huge, four-footed mammal of India and Africa, having thick, wrinkled skin, a long, flexible snout, or trunk, and long, curved, ivory tusks; hence, 2, anything cumbersome, awkward, or unwieldy.

AFRICAN ELEPHANT ($\frac{1}{125}$) el-e-phan-ti-a-sis (ĕl″ē-făn-tī′ə-sĭs), n. Pathol., a chronic skin disease in which the parts affected, usually the legs, become hard, rough, fissured, and greatly enlarged.

el-e-phan-tine (ĕl″ē-făn′tĭn; ĕl″ē-făn′tīn), adj. 1, huge; unwieldy; clumsy; 2, resembling or relating to an elephant.

el-e-phant's-ear (ĕl′ē-fănts-ēr″), n. 1, the taro: so called from the size and shape of its leaf; 2, the begonia.

El-eu-sin-i-an (ĕl″ū-sĭn′ĭ-ăn), adj. [< Gk. Eleusinios, of Eleusis], pertaining to the ancient city of Eleusis, near Athens: Eleusinian mysteries, religious ceremonies in honor of Demeter and Persephone, originally held in secret at Eleusis, and later made a part of the state religion of Athens.

el-e-vate (ĕl′ē-vāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -vated, p.pr. -vating], [< Lat. elevare (-atus), to lift < levis, light], 1, to raise to a higher level; lift; 2, to raise to a higher rank; ennoble; 3, to exalt intellectually, morally, or spiritually; inspire; animate; fill with gladness or hope; 4, of sounds, to make louder; also, to raise the pitch of.—p.adj. el′e-vat″ed.

Syn. promote, exalt, dignify, cheer, erect, heighten.

el-e-va-tion (ĕl″ē-vā′shŭn), n. 1, act of raising; state of being raised; exaltation; 2, a raised place; 3, height above a specific level, especially sea level; altitude: Astron., the angular height of a heavenly body above the horizon; Drawing, a geometrical representation of the front, one of the sides, or the rear of a building or the like (see plan, illus.).

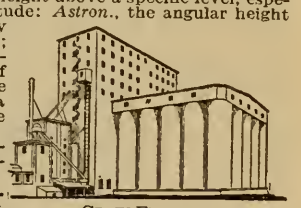
Syn. height, altitude, eminence, loftiness, exaltation.



GRAIN ELEVATOR

el-e-va-tor (ĕl′ē-vā″tĕr), n. 1, that which raises up or exalts; 2, a hoisting machine or lift; a cage moving up and down in a shaft, to carry people or goods from one level to another; 3, a warehouse for the storage, lifting, and distribution of grain: Aëro., a movable plane surface for controlling the altitude or inclination of an airplane by inclining it up or down like a horizontal rudder: also called driving rudder (for illus. see empennage; airplane).

e-lev-en (ē-lĕv′n), adj. [< A.S. endleofan < O.Teut. source], consisting of one more than ten:—n. 1, the sum of ten and one; 2, a symbol representing eleven units, as 11 or xi; 3, a team having eleven players, as in cricket or football.—adj. and n. e-lev′enth.

elf (ĕlf), n. [pl. elves (ĕlvz)], [< A.S. ælf, elf], 1, in fairy tales, folklore, and mythology, a tiny, mischievous sprite supposed to haunt hills and wild places; a dwarf; fairy; pixie; 2, a fairylike child.

elf child a child believed to have been exchanged by the elves for another; a changeling.

elf-in (ĕl′fĭn), adj. resembling or pertaining to sprites or goblins:—n. 1, a sprite; 2, a frolicsome child; 3, one of several delicate butterflies.

elf-ish (ĕl′fĭsh), adj. resembling, or caused by, a sprite or goblin; impish; mischievous.—adv. elf′ish-ly.—n. elf′ish-ness.

elf-lock (ĕlf′lŏk″), n. [elf + ¹lock], a lock of hair twisted and tangled as if done by mischievous elves; a tangled mass of hair.

El-i (ē′lī), n. [Heb. = elevation], Bib., a judge and high priest of Israel, the teacher of Samuel (1 Sam. 1:9–17; 4:13–18).

e-lic-it (ē-lĭs′ĭt), v.t. [< Lat. elicere (elicitus) < e, out + lacere, to entice], to draw out, as an opinion; sometimes, to draw forth by, or as by, force, artifice, or cunning; as, to elicit a confession.

Syn. educe, deduce, evoke, extract, extort.

e-lide (ē-līd'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. elided, p.pr. eliding], [< Lat. elidere (elisus) < e, out + laedere, to injure], 1, to omit or ignore; 2, to cut off or omit, as the final vowel or syllable of a word.

el-i-gi-bil-i-ty (ĕl"ĭ-jĭ-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. [see eligible], fitness to be chosen; suitability.

el-i-gi-ble (ĕl'ĭ-jĭ-bl), adj. [< Lat. eligere < e, out + legere, to choose], capable of being, or fit to be, chosen; suitable; qualified for office:—n. one who meets the given requirements.—adv. el'i-gi-bly.

E-li-jah (ē-lī'jă), n. [< Heb. = Jehovah is my God], Bib., a fearless Hebrew prophet, renowned for many miracles, who was finally taken to heaven in a chariot of fire (1 and 2 Kings).

e-lim-i-nate (ē-lĭm'ĭ-nāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -nated, p.pr. -nating], [< Lat. e, from + limen (liminis), threshold], 1, to cast out; remove; 2, to leave out of consideration: Math., to remove (an unknown quantity) from two or more algebraic equations; Physiol., to expel from the body; excrete.—n. e-lim"i-na'tion.—adj. e-lim'i-na-tive.

Syn. expel, ignore, reject, exclude. To exclude is to keep from coming in that which has never been in; the United States excludes large numbers of would-be immigrants. To eliminate is to get rid of something that is already in as a part, usually a constituent part; in reducing expenses, we eliminate unnecessary items.

E-lis-a-beth (ē-lĭz'ă-bĕth), n. [< Heb. = worshiper of God], Bib., the wife of Zacharias, and mother of John the Baptist (Luke 1:5–57).

E-li-sha (ē-lī'shă), n. [< Heb. = God is salvation], Bib., a great Hebrew prophet, disciple of Elijah, upon whom Elijah's mantle fell (1 and 2 Kings).

e-li-sion (ē-lĭzh'ŭn), n. [see elide], a cutting off, omission, or suppression, usually of a vowel or syllable for the sake of euphony or rhythm.

é-lite (ā"lēt'), n. [Fr. = chosen; choice], the best or choicest part, as of society or a profession.

e-lix-ir (ē-lĭk'sēr), n. [< Arab. al-iksīr, elixir], 1, an aromatic, sweetened preparation containing active medicinal substances; 2, an imaginary substance formerly believed by alchemists to be able to change cheaper metals into gold: also called philosophers' stone; 3, an imaginary liquid formerly believed capable of prolonging life indefinitely: also called elixir of life: Obs., quintessence or embodiment; inmost principle.

E-liz-a-be-than (ē-lĭz"ă-bē'thăn; ē-lĭz'ă-bĕth"ăn), adj. [see Elisabeth], pertaining to Queen Elizabeth of England (1533–1603) or to her times:—n. one who lived in that time.—abbr. Eliz.

EUROPEAN ELK (⅛₀)

elk (ĕlk), n. [perh. < M.H.G. elch, elk], 1, a large mammal (Alces alces) of the deer family, with large, flattened antlers, closely akin to the American moose but slightly smaller (cf. moose, illus.), found in northern Europe and Asia; 2, in North America, the wapiti (which see for illus.): Elk, a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, a fraternal organization founded in 1868.

¹ell (ĕl), n. [< A.S. eln, ell < O. Teut. source], a lineal measure varying from 27 to 48 inches, formerly widely used in foreign countries.

²ell (ĕl), n. [< letter L, in ref. to shape], 1, an addition to a house at right angles with the main structure; 2, a right angle joint, as of a pipe or tubing.

el-lipse (ē-lĭps'), n. [< Gk. elleipsis, a leaving, defect < elleipein, to come short], Geom., 1, the path of a point, the sum of whose distances from two fixed points, called foci, is constant; a closed curve arising from the section of a cone by a plane; 2, popularly, a closed oval curve (see illus. next column and under oval, conic).

el-lip-sis (ē-lĭp'sĭs), n. [pl. -ses (-sēz)], Gram., the omission of a word or words necessary to make the grammatical construction complete, which can be supplied from the context; Print., a sign [as * * * or . . .] indicating an omission.

el-lip-soid (ē-lĭp'soĭd), n. Geom., a solid, all of whose plane sections are ellipses or circles; also, the surface of such a solid:—adj. pertaining to such a solid.—adj. el"lip-soi'dal (ĕl"ĭp-soi'dăl).

el-lip-tic (ē-lĭp'tĭk), adj. relating to, or formed like, an ellipse: Gram., shortened by the omission of a part; defective; as, an elliptic phrase.—adj. el-lip'ti-cal.—adv. el-lip'ti-cal-ly.

ELLIPSE
A'A, long axis; B'B, short axis; F'F, foci; O, center.

el-lip-tic-i-ty (ĕl"ĭp-tĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. 1, the state of being elliptical; 2, the degree of deviation (of an ellipse or spheroid) from the form of a circle or sphere; specifically, the ratio of the difference between the equatorial and the polar diameter of the earth to the equatorial diameter, about $\frac{1}{297}$, giving the compression of the earth's form from the true sphere.

To draw an ellipse: A, B, fixed points; C, moving point; ACB, string.

elm (ĕlm), n. [A.S.], 1, any of a genus (Ulmus) of large and graceful shade trees, having rough, doubly serrated leaves (see deliquescent, illus.); 2, the hard, tough wood obtained from this tree.

el-o-cu-tion (ĕl"ō-kū'shŭn), n. [< Lat. e, out + loqui (locutus), to speak], 1, the art which teaches the use of voice and gesture in public speaking; 2, style of oral expression.—adj. el"o-cu'tion-a-ry.

el-o-cu-tion-ist (ĕl"ō-kū'shŭn-ĭst), n. one who practices or teaches elocution.

E-lo-him (ē-lō'hĭm; ē-lō'hēm), n. [Heb.: pl. of 'Ēlōah, God], one of the two Hebrew names for God, in the Hebrew text of the Old Testament: translated in the King James version "God," in distinction from Jehovah (Yahweh), translated "Lord."

E-lo-hist (ē-lō'hĭst), n. 1, as established by modern critical research, the author of certain portions of the first six books of the Bible, in which God is spoken of in the Hebrew as Elohim, translated "God," instead of Jehovah or Yahweh, translated "Lord," as in other portions: used with the; 2, an ancient Hebrew prophetic document containing anecdotes from Jewish history.—adj. El"o-bis'tic.

E. long. abbr. East longitude, measuring from a specified place, as Greenwich, England.

e-lon-gate (ē-lŏng'gāt; ē'lŏng-gāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -gated, p.pr. -gating], [< Lat. e, out + longare (-atus), to lengthen], to stretch; lengthen:—v.i. to become longer; stretch:—adj. long; tapering.

e-lon-ga-tion (ē"lŏng-gā'shŭn), n. Astron., 1, the angular distance of an interior planet from the sun; 2, the extreme east or west position of a heavenly body as viewed from the earth.

e-lope (ē-lōp'), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. eloped (-lōpt'), p.pr. eloping], [< A.F. aloper, to run away], 1, to run away with a lover; 2, to escape secretly, as from home or duty.—n. e-lope'ment.—n. e-lop'er.

el-o-quence (ĕl'ō-kwĕns), n. [see eloquent], vivid and fluent expression of ideas, especially in speech, or the art of such expression.

el-o-quent (ĕl'ō-kwĕnt), adj. [< Lat. e, out + loquens (-entis), speaking], capable of, or characterized by, forceful, vivid expression of emotion, ideas, etc.—adv. el'o-quent-ly.

El-sa (ĕl'să), n. [Ger.], the heroine of Richard Wagner's opera "Lohengrin," a princess of Brabant who becomes the bride of Lohengrin.

else (ĕls), adv. [< A.S. elles < O. Teut. source], differently; otherwise; besides; instead; in another or a different place; as, where else can I go?—adj. implying some one or something additional or different; used following the word modified; as, somebody else; something else:—pron. Obs., other.

else-where (ĕls'hwâr"), adv. [else + where], in, at, or to, some other place.

El-si-nore (ĕl"sĭ-nōr'), n. [< Dan. Helsingör], a Danish fortified town on the coast of Zealand Island: the setting of Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

e-lu-ci-date (ē-lū'sĭ-dāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -dated, p.pr. -dating], [< Lat. e, out + lucidare (-atus), to make bright < lucidus, bright < lux, light], to make clear; explain; illustrate; as, to elucidate a theory.—n. e-lu"ci-da'tion.—adj. e-lu'ci-da-tive.
Syn. illustrate, explain, expound. (See interpret.)

e-lude (ē-lūd'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. eluded, p.pr. eluding], [< Lat. e, from + ludere (lusus), to play], to avoid or escape as by deceit or cleverness; baffle.
Syn. avoid, foil, evade, shun, dodge, baffle.

E-lul (ē-lōōl'), n. [< Heb.], the sixth month of the Hebrew ecclesiastical year, nearly September.

e-lu-sion (ē-lū'zhŭn), n. [see elude], the act of escaping or avoiding; clever evasion.

TABLE OF CHEMICAL ELEMENTS

ARRANGEMENT.—The elements are arranged in alphabetical order, in the interest of ready reference. In Appendix I, however, they are printed in a chart arranged according to the Periodic Law of Mendeléeff.

EXPLANATIONS.—Several elements have different constants for their different forms, as indicated.—Some elements have two names and two symbols; such are listed twice.—A figure preceded by the sign > indicates a temperature above the one named.—The constants for some of the elements, recently discovered, have not been ascertained.—Two dots (..) indicate information not known. A question mark (?) indicates information not certainly known.—A dash (—) indicates information not applicable.

SYMBOLS.—Most of the symbols consist of the initial letter of the name of the element, with or without an additional letter, and can thus be readily found in the list below, which is arranged alphabetically according to the names of the elements. A few, however, derived from Latin or modern Latin names, are not so easily found on such a list, and are given herewith: Ag, silver (argentum); Fe, iron (ferrum); K, potassium (kalium); Pb, lead (plumbum); Sn, tin (stannum); Au, gold (aurum); Hg, mercury (hydrargyrum); Na, sodium (natrium); Sb, antimony (stibium); W, tungsten (wolframium).

KEY TO ABBREVIATIONS.—At. Wt., atomic weight; Sp. Gr., specific gravity; Melt. Point, Deg. C., melting point in degrees Centigrade; am., amorphous form; gas., gaseous form; crystal., crystalline form; Preh., prehistoric; El. arc, boils in the electric arc.

Syn., n. symbol, sign, type, image, token. An emblem is an object that stands for another object, or for an idea, by figurative, not direct, representation. A laurel wreath has long been an emblem of achievement; the dove is the emblem of peace; the flag is the emblem of the nation. A symbol stands for some object or idea; it is regarded by general consent as naturally representing this object or idea, and in this sense is synonymous with emblem; as, black is the symbol of mourning; the cross is the symbol of Christianity. In another sense, symbol is not synonymous with emblem; a symbol can be a mark or character commonly agreed upon as a conventional representation of some idea or process, as algebraic symbols, or letters and figures employed as chemical symbols. A sign may be a trace or indication, furnishing proof or evidence; as, a sign of spring; marks of blood were signs that the burglar was wounded. A sign, too, may be an arbitrary mark, used to designate an idea or thing; as, the plus sign; the sign of the cross; a word sign in stenography. In this latter sense, sign comes close to symbol in meaning. A token is something given or done as a guarantee of authority, authenticity, good faith, or as a pledge or memorial; as, he sent his watch as a token that the message was authentic. Token in some cases is synonymous with symbol and sign; as, they flew a red flag from the tower as a token of defiance.

e-merge (ē-mûrj′), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. emerged (-mûrjd′), p.pr. emerging], [<Lat. e, out +mergere (mersus), to dip], to rise up, as from a fluid; come forth from anything that conceals; become visible.

e-mer-gence (ē-mûr′jĕns), n. 1, the act of coming forth; 2, that which rises up or comes forth; 3, incorrectly, an emergency.

e-mer-gen-cy (ē-mûr′jĕn-sĭ), n. [pl. -cies (-sĭz)], a sudden or unexpected happening, demanding prompt action; pressing necessity:—adj. pertaining to, or used in, a crisis requiring rapid and efficient action; as, an emergency brake.

Syn., n. exigency, crisis, necessity, pass, conjuncture. These words agree in the idea of naming a pressing state of affairs. An emergency names such a condition as demands immediate action; it is sudden, unforeseen, and urgent. An exigency, too, is urgent, but it names a need rising out of a certain situation, rather than, like emergency, the situation itself. The exigencies of a journey require certain expenditures, adjustments, etc.; the loss, after one had started, of all the money one had provided for a journey in a strange land, would constitute an emergency. A crisis is such a turning point in one's affairs as to make a decision or decisive change necessary. Things that have come to a crisis can no longer go on, they must alter for better or for worse.

em-ploy (ĕm-ploĭ'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ployed (-ploĭd'), p.pr. -ploying], [< Fr. employer < Lat. implicare, to fold in], 1, to give occupation to; keep busy; 2, to make use of; 3, to apply or devote to an object; as, to employ one's time in reading:—n. the state of being engaged in some occupation; service.

Syn., v. use, hire, occupy, busy. As applied to things, employ and use are interchangeable, though employ often carries the idea of making a special use of; as, we used such methods of demonstrating as appealed to the eye; for this particular purpose we employed charts. In those cases, however, which naturally involve the destruction or consumption of the article used, employ cannot be substituted; we say that we use, not employ, five pounds of sugar per week. As applied to persons, use connotes degradation; one who lets himself be used for another's purpose deserves contempt. Employ and hire differ chiefly in a point of emphasis and consequent dignity; employ stresses the idea of the service rendered, and so is more dignified than hire, which frankly stresses the pay received.

em-ploy-ee (ĕm-ploi-ē′), n. one who works for another for wages or salary. Also, em″ploy″é′ (ĕm-ploi-ā′; än″plwä″yā′).

emp-ty (ĕmp′tĭ), adj. [comp. -tier, superl. -tiest], [< A.S. æmetig, at leisure], 1, containing nothing; 2, vague; unsatisfactory; as, empty dreams; 3, destitute of, or lacking in, force, knowledge, or sense; as, empty words; 4, vacant; unoccupied, as a house: Colloq., hungry:—n. an empty car, truck, container, or the like: Com., especially, an emptied container being returned to the shipper:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -tied (-tĭd), p.pr. -tying], 1, to deprive of the contents; make vacant; 2, to pour out; discharge:—v.i. to become empty; discharge itself.—adv. emp′ti-ly.—n. emp′ti-ness.

Syn., adj. vacant, blank, unfilled, inane, hollow, unoccupied, void. That is empty which has nothing in it; that is vacant which lacks what is supposed to fill or occupy it. An empty house is bare of furniture. A vacant house contains no inmates. A house, however, can be empty yet not vacant; and, on the other hand, a house to be let furnished can be vacant and not empty. Figuratively, empty and vacant have similar meanings; an empty honor leaves its recipient as well off as he was before; a vacant hour has nothing planned to fill it; a vacant stare is dull and idiotic. Blank describes that which is free from any writing or marks, as unused paper, or spaces, in printed matter, left to be filled in.

emp-ty-ings (ĕmp′tĭ-ĭngz), n.pl. U. S. Colloq., the dregs or sediment of liquor; yeast.

Also, em-pyr′e-al (ĕm-pīr′ē-ăl; ĕm″pĭ-rē′ăl).

e-mu (ē′mū), n. [perh. < Port. ema, crane], any of several species (all but two, of genus Dromæus, extinct) of large Australian birds akin to the ostrich, having undeveloped wings, but having feathers on the neck and part of the head. Also, e′meu.

Emu ($\frac{1}{80}$)

em-u-late (ĕm′ū-lāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -lated, p. pr. -lating], [< Lat. aemulari (-atus), to try to excel], 1, to try to equal or excel (a person, act, quality, etc.); vie with; 2, to equal or match as a result of effort.—n. em′u-la′tor.—n. em″-u-la′tion.—adj. em′u-la-tive.

Syn., n. competition, opposition, rivalry, ambition, strife. Competition is a contest between those who are trying to gain the same object at the same time. Emulation is a striving to equal or surpass others; it is born of the contemplation of another's greatness, and the desire to outdo him; hence, it may be directed toward following the example of one who is dead. An author might strive in competition with living authors for a short-story prize, he might work in emulation of the smooth style of Stevenson. The result of competition is usually tangible; that of emulation may be one of feeling or attitude; as, such industry as his either excites our emulation, or plunges us into apathetic despair. Rivalry exists between those striving against each other for favor in love or politics, for greatness, for influence, or the like. Those engaged in rivalry are often unfriendly, if not hostile; competition may be good-natured; emulation is honorable and commendable.

em-u-lous (ĕm′ū-lŭs), adj. eager to equal or excel; rivaling.—adv. em′u-lous-ly.

e-mul-si-fi-er (ē-mŭl′sĭ-fī″ĕr), n. [see emulsify], a substance, such as gum arabic, gelatin, etc., employed to effect the emulsion of an oil.

e-mul-si-fy (ē-mŭl′sĭ-fī), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -fied (-fīd), p.pr. -fying], [< Lat. e, from + mulgēre (mulsus), to milk], to make or form into an emulsion.

e-mul-sion (ē-mŭl′shŭn), n. 1, a liquid mixture consisting of one substance, often a fat, suspended in another in the form of minute drops; specifically, a gelatinous solution containing silver salts, used for coating photographic plates; 2, any milklike mixture or solution.

e-mul-sive (ē-mŭl′sĭv), adj. 1, capable of being made into an emulsion; 2, like, or having the same effect as, an emulsion.

e-mul-soid (ē-mŭl′soid), n. Chem., a colloidal solution in which the particles in suspension are of a liquid not soluble in the suspending liquid.

e-munc-to-ry (ē-mŭngk′tō-rĭ), n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], [< Lat. e, out + mungere (munctus), to blow the nose], any organ or duct that discharges waste material from the body, as the kidneys:—adj. discharging waste matter; excretory.

Syn. load, burden, pack, weight, obstruction, impediment. A burden is a weight that bears one down with the labor and difficulty of sustaining it. A load is that which is to be carried; a load may be light or heavy. Burdens are commonly borne by living beings, chiefly by persons; loads may be carried by people, animals, or conveyances. A man may take a burden upon himself, or have it thrust upon him; a load is usually laid on. Both load and burden apply to that which bears down upon the mind or spirit as well as upon the body. An encumbrance is such an additional weight as is burdensome, hindering, or retarding; debts, mortgages, lack of credit, are financial encumbrances. (See hindrance.)

en-e-ma (ĕn'ĕ-mă; ē-nē'mă), n. [pl. -mas (-măz); enemata (ĕ-nĕm'ă-tă)], [Gk. < en, in + hienai, to send], Med., a liquid or gaseous substance injected into the rectum; also, the process of injecting it.

en-e-my (ĕn'ĕ-mĭ), n. [pl. -mies (-mĭz)], [< O.F. enemi < Lat. inimicus < in-(negative) + amicus, friend], 1, a hostile person; foe; 2, one of a hostile army or country; also, a hostile army or fleet:—adj. Mil., of or pertaining to foes; as, an enemy cruiser.

Syn., n. adversary, opponent, antagonist, foe, rival, competitor. These words agree in naming an opposing agent. Enemy, as here compared, is the strongest term, connoting not only one who hates, but one who desires to injure the object of his hatred. An enemy is therefore personally hostile. Foe, in modern usage, is a literary or poetic equivalent for enemy, though it formerly indicated a more intense, because implacable, hatred. Since one cannot hate himself implacably, one can be his own worst enemy, but not his own foe. An opponent is one who upholds an opposite view, as in a debate, and can be quite without hostile or personal feeling. Antagonist names one who is engaged in an actual struggle and is influenced by animosity. Adversary names one hostilely and bitterly arrayed against another, with a feeling always personal. A rival is one who is striving to win the same goal at the same time as another, usually in the field of love, war, or politics.—Ant. friend, helper.

en-er-get-ic (ĕn″ĕr-jĕt'ĭk), adj. [see energy], 1, vigorous in action; forcible; 2, full of life; active.—adv. en″er-get'i-cal-ly.

en-er-gize (ĕn'ĕr-jīz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -gized (-jīzd), p.pr. -gizing], to lend power or animation to:—v.i. to display power; act vigorously.

en-er-gu-men (ĕn″ĕr-gū'mĕn), n. [< Gk. energoumenos, devil-possessed < energein, to work upon], a demoniac; fanatic; enthusiast.

en-er-gy (ĕn'ĕr-jĭ), n. [pl. -gies (-jĭz)], [< Gk. energeia < en, on + ergon, work], 1, strength, power, or spirit shown in words or action; 2, strength or power whether exercised or not; ability to act; mental vigor; 3, the result or effect of activity: Phys., the capacity for doing mechanical work, the principal types being those due to motion and position.

Syn. power, force, vigor, strength, might. Power is that principle which in all things moves, governs, changes, effects, accomplishes. The power of the mind to think, the power of a nation to enforce its laws, the power of an animal to move—these examples show how general is the application of the word. Power may be exerted or latent. Energy, force, rigor, and strength are particular forms of power. Energy has its root in the mind, and is the power of producing an effect, whether exerted or not. A speech which galvanizes a sleepy audience into life is an example of energy actively at work. To predict that a man will act in a certain way under given conditions because of the energy of his character is to bank on a latent ability for efficient action. Force can mean power exerted on an object, it can mean mental and moral strength, or it can indicate constraint or coercion; as, the force of a collision; the force of a stream of water or current of electricity; force of character; the force of an upright or unyielding attitude of mind; a promise obtained by force. Strength of mind connotes resolution; strength of soul, the power to endure or persevere in the face of temptation or heartache; strength of body implies a frame, a muscular system, and a constitution capable of standing up under severe physical strain. Vigor is that fresh quality of mind and body that has its roots in health.—Ant. lifelessness, languor, lassitude.

en-er-vate (ĕn'ẽr-vāt; ē-nûr'vāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -vated, p.pr. -vating], [< Lat. enervare (-atus) < e, from + nervus, a sinew], to deprive of nerve, force, or vigor; debilitate; weaken physically or morally.—n. en'er-va'tion.—n. en'er-va'tor.

ep-si-lon (ĕp′sĭ-lŏn), n. [< Gk. e psilon, e bare], the fifth letter [ε, E (see App. I)] of the Greek alphabet, equivalent in general to English short e.

Ep-som salts (ĕp′sŭm), [< Epsom in Surrey], magnesium sulphate, a white, crystalline substance used in medicine as a cathartic or commercially in dyeing, finishing cotton goods, etc.

eq. abbr. 1, equal; 2, equivalent (also, equiv.); 3, equation; 4, equator.

e-qua-ble (ē′kwȧ-bl; ĕk′wȧ-), adj. [see equate], 1, uniform; steady; 2, even and serene in temperament.—n. e″qua-bil′i-ty.—adv. e′qua-bly.

Syn. tranquil, regular, uniform, even, steady.—Ant. uneven, varying, unsteady, changing, unsettled.

e-qual (ē′kwăl), adj. [< Lat. aequalis, equal], 1, of the same extent, number, or magnitude; uniform; 2, adequate: with to; 3, of the same rank, degree, or value; 4, evenly balanced; 5, just; equable: —v.t. [p.t. and p.p. equaled or equalled (-kwăld), p.pr. equaling or equalling], 1, to have the same size, rank, value, etc., with; 2, to return a full equivalent for; 3, to make equal:—n. a thing of the same extent, magnitude, or value, as another; a person of the same or similar rank, attainments, etc.—adv. e′qual-ly.—n. e-qual′i-ty.

Syn., adj. alike, equable, commensurate, fair, impartial, equitable.—Ant., adj. unlike, unequal, unjust.

e-qual-ize (ē′kwȧl-īz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ized (-īzd), p.pr. -izing], 1, to make the same in size, rank, etc.; 2, to render uniform.—n. e″qual-i-za′tion.

e-qual-iz-er (ē′kwȧl-īz″ẽr), n. one who or that which makes equal: Aëro., a sliding panel that stabilizes an airplane laterally; Elec., a conductor, of low resistance, used to join two generators to equalize their voltage; Telephony, a network having an attenuation complementary to that of a telephone line, for the purpose of equalizing the attenuation at the frequencies used.

AUTOMOBILE EQUALIZER from above: a, equalizer; b, b, brake rods leading to brake bands; c, springs; d, brake rod connecting with brake pedal; e, rear axle housing. As d moves forward, a equalizes pull on crank rods which turn b, b; when brake pedal is released, springs c pull b, b into neutral position.

e-qua-nim-i-ty (ē″kwȧ-nĭm′ĭ-tĭ), n. [< Lat. aequus, even + animus, mind], evenness of temper or mind; calmness; serenity.

Syn. tranquillity, self-possession. (See composure.)

e-quate (ē-kwāt′), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. equated, p.pr. equating], [< Lat. aequare (-atus), to make equal], 1, to reduce to an average; 2, to represent as an equation; make equal.

e-qua-tion (ē-kwā′shŭn; ē-kwā′zhŭn), n. the act of making equal; state of being equal: Math., a statement of equality between two expressions or quantities, the equal sign [=] being placed between them; Chem., a representation of a chemical reaction by symbols; Astron., a correction to be applied for any varying source of error: personal equation, the influence of one's disposition upon one's reasoning and actions.

e-qua-tor (ē-kwā′tŏr), n. 1, an imaginary line round the earth, everywhere equally distant from the poles; 2, the great circle of the heavens, formed where the plane of the earth's equator cuts the celestial sphere: called celestial equator or equinoctial line.

e-qua-to-ri-al (ē″kwȧ-tō′rĭ-ăl), n. Astron., 1, a specially mounted telescope, with two axes, a polar axis, parallel to the earth's, and a declination axis, perpendicular to it: designed so that by rotation on its polar axis it can be made to follow the apparent motion of any star; 2, such a type of mounting:—adj. pertaining to the equator, or to an equatorial.

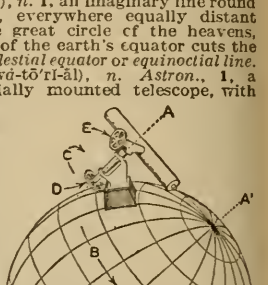

DIAGRAM OF MOUNTING OF EQUATORIAL TELESCOPE

A, polar axis of telescope, parallel to A′, the axis of the earth; B, direction of rotation of the earth; C, direction of compensating rotation of telescope on axis A. Hour circle, D, and declination circle on axis, E, are used in pointing the telescope as desired.

eq-uer-ry (ĕk′wẽr-ĭ; ē-kwẽr′ĭ), n. [pl. equerries (-ĭz)], [< Fr. écurie < L.L. scuria, stable < O.H.G. scūr, shed], an officer who attends a prince or nobleman, and has charge of his horses.

e-ques-tri-an (ē-kwĕs′trĭ-ăn), adj. [< Lat. eques, horseman], 1, pertaining to horses or horsemanship; performing with horses; 2, mounted; representing a mounted figure; 3, pertaining to, or composed of, knights:—n. a rider; a skilled horseman.—n.fem. e-ques″tri-enne′.

e-qui- prefix, [< Lat. aequus, equal], equal or equally; as, *equi*lateral.

e-qui-an-gu-lar (ē″kwĭ-ăng′gū-lẽr), adj. [equi- + angle], having equal angles.

e-qui-dis-tant (ē″kwĭ-dĭs′tănt), adj. [equi- + distant], separated by equal distances.

e-qui-lat-er-al (ē″kwĭ-lăt′ẽr-ăl), adj. [equi- + latera], having all the sides equal:—n. a figure with equal sides; a side equal to other sides: equilateral triangle, a figure having three equal sides and, hence, three equal angles.—adv. e″qui-lat′er-al-ly.

EQUILATERAL TRIANGLE

e-quil-i-brant (ē-kwĭl′ĭ-brănt), n. [see equilibrate], Mech., a force having the capacity to balance another force or combination of forces.

e-qui-li-brate (ē″kwĭ-lī′brāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -brated, p.pr. -brating], [< Lat. aequus, even + libra, balance], 1, to balance; 2, to counterpoise:—v.i. to balance.—n. e″qui-li-bra′tion.—n. e″qui-li′bra-tor.

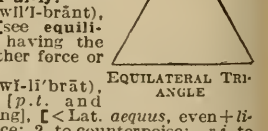
e-qui-lib-ri-um (ē″kwĭ-lĭb′rĭ-ŭm), n. [pl. -riums (-ŭmz); -ria (-ȧ)], the state of balance; equipoise between opposing forces: the equilibrium of a body being called stable, neutral, or unstable, according as the body, if slightly displaced, returns to its position, retains its new position, or tends to be farther displaced from its position: Chem., the condition or state assumed by a mixture, or compound, when all reactions which may take place under the conditions in which it exists are completed; Radioactivity, the condition of a radioactive substance in which its rate of formation from its parent substance is equal to its rate of disintegration.



TYPES OF EQUILIBRIUM 1, stable; 2, unstable; 3, neutral: a, a, a, center of gravity.

e-quine (ē'kwīn), adj. [< Lat. equus, horse], of or pertaining to a horse:—n. a horse.

e-qui-noc-tial (ē"kwĭ-nŏk'shăl), adj. [see equinox], Astron., pertaining to the equinoxes, or the two times of the year when day and night are of equal length: equinoctial line, the equator of the celestial sphere, in the same plane as the earth's equator: equinoctial points, the two points where the annual path of the sun intersects the celestial equator:—n. 1, the equator of the sky; the celestial equator; 2, a storm at the season of equal day and night.

e-qui-nox (ē'kwĭ-nŏks), n. [< Lat. aequus, equal + nox (noctis), night], Astron., either of the two times during the year at which the sun crosses the equator of the sky, making the days and nights of equal length, the vernal equinox occurring about March 21, and the autumnal equinox about September 22; also, either of the two points where the path of the sun crosses the celestial equator on these dates.

e-quip (ē-kwĭp'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. equipped (-kwĭpt'), p.pr. equipping], [< Fr. équiper, prob. < O.N. skipa, to man (a ship) < skip, ship], 1, to furnish or fit out for any service or undertaking; 2, to prepare mentally; instruct; as, to equip a boy for his examinations; 3, to dress; as, to equip oneself for a walk.

eq-ui-page (ĕk'wĭ-pāj), n. [Fr.: see equip], 1, the arms and outfit of an army, vessel, traveler, etc.; 2, the carriage, horses, and liveried servants of a person of rank; also, a carriage of state: Archaic, a service for the toilet or the table; Obs., apparel; trappings; accouterments.

e-quip-ment (ē-kwĭp'mĕnt), n. [see equip], 1, all the necessary supplies for any particular service, as for fitting out offices, stores, a railway, laboratory, person, or the like; 2, the act of fitting out with supplies; also, the state of being fitted out.

e-qui-poise (ē'kwĭ-poiz), n. [equi- + poise], 1, equilibrium or balance; equality of weight; 2, a counterbalancing weight or force.

e-qui-pol-lent (ē"kwĭ-pŏl'ĕnt), adj. [< Lat. aequus, equal + pollĕre, to be strong], equal in strength, weight, meaning, etc.; equivalent:—n. an equivalent.—n. e"qui-pol'lence; e"qui-pol'len-cy.

e-qui-pon-der-ant (ē"kwĭ-pŏn'dĕr-ănt), adj. [< Lat. aequus, equal + ponderare, to weigh], of the same weight; counterbalanced: with to or with.—n. e"qui-pon'der-ance.

e-qui-po-ten-tial (ē"kwĭ-pō-tĕn'shăl), adj. [equi- + potential], Phys., having the same potentiality: used of a surface in a field of force at each point of which a body would have the same potential energy.

eq-ui-se-tum (ĕk"wĭ-sē'tŭm), n. [pl. -tums (-tŭmz); -ta (-tă)], [Lat. < equus, a horse + seta, a bristle], Bot., any of a genus (Equisetum) of rushlike plants allied to the ferns, having harsh, jointed, hollow stems, and reproducing by spores instead of seeds; scouring rush (for illus. see Pteridophyta).

eq-ui-ta-ble (ĕk'wĭ-tă-bl), adj. [see equity], impartial; just; fair: often distinguished from legal.—adv. eq'ui-ta-bly.—n. eq'ui-ta-ble-ness.

Syn. honest, right, reasonable, equal, upright, fair.

eq-ui-tant (ĕk'wĭ-tănt), adj. [see equitation], Bot., overlapping: used of leaves whose bases fold from the midrib and inclose others, as in the iris.

eq-ui-ta-tion (ĕk"wĭ-tā'shŭn), n. [< Lat. equitare (-atus), to ride a horse], the act or art of riding on a horse; horsemanship.

eq-ui-tes (ĕk'wĭ-tēz), n.pl. [Lat. = horsemen], in ancient Rome, citizens of a privileged class from which the cavalry was recruited.

eq-ui-ty (ĕk'wĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], [< O.F. equité < Lat. aequitas, justice], 1, justice; impartiality; just regard to any right or claim; 2, the administration of law according to its spirit and not merely according to its letter: Law, 1, a body of laws based on natural principles of justice, administered by courts of equity, and superseding or supplementing statute laws; 2, the value of property in excess of mortgages or encumbrances that are a lien against the property: equity of redemption, the right of a mortgagor to redeem property after it has been forfeited for nonpayment and before sale by the sheriff, by paying the amount of the mortgage with interest and costs.

Syn. righteousness, impartiality. (See justice.)

e-quiv-a-lence (ē-kwĭv'ă-lĕns), n. [see equivalent], the state of being equal in value, power, quantity, etc.: Chem., the property of an element or radical of combining with, or of replacing in a compound, another element or radical, in definite and unalterable proportions. Also, e-quiv'a-len-cy.

e-quiv-a-lent (ē-kwĭv'ă-lĕnt), adj. [< Lat. aequus, equal + valĕre, to be worth], equal in value or power; the same in significance or effect: Geom., equal in measure, as in length, area, or volume, but not identical in shape:—n. a thing of the same value, weight, power, effect, etc.: Chem., the quantity by weight of a substance which in chemical reactions will combine with or replace a unit quantity by weight of hydrogen.—adv. e-quiv'a-lent-ly.

e-quiv-o-cal (ē-kwĭv'ō-kăl), adj. [< Lat. aequus, equal + vocare (-atus), to call], of a doubtful or double meaning; open to suspicion or doubt; uncertain.—adv. e-quiv'o-cal-ly.

Syn. obscure, dubious, indefinite, perplexing, suspicious, ambiguous. An expression is ambiguous which leaves us entirely uncertain as to which of two possible meanings the writer or speaker intended to convey. An equivocal expression is one which is capable of a double interpretation, either because of the words used, or because of their possible application to two different things. Equivocal expressions are usually deliberately deceptive.—Ant. certain, clear, definite, unquestionable.

e-quiv-o-cate (ē-kwĭv'ō-kāt), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -cated, p.pr. -cating], to speak with double meanings; evade the truth by speaking ambiguously.—n. e-quiv'o-ca'tion.—n. e-quiv'o-ca'tor.

Syn. shuffle, quibble, evade, shift. (See prevaricate.)

eq-ui-voque (ĕk'wĭ-vōk; ē'kwĭ-vōk), n. an ambiguous term; double meaning; a pun. Also, eq'ui-voke.

E. R. abbr. [Lat. Eduardus Rex], King Edward:—Er, Chem., the symbol [Er] for the element erbium.

-er n. suffix, [< O.Teut. source], denoting: 1, one who occupies himself with (the idea of the word stem); as, astronomer; lawyer; 2, an agent; as, lover; mower: sometimes, -ar; as, liar; 3, an instrument; as, poker; 4, one living in; as, New Englander: New Yorker.

-er suffix, [< A.S. adj. suffix -ra < O.Teut.; and < A.S. adv. suffix -or < O.Teut.], forming the comparative degree of adjectives and adverbs; as, higher.

-er suffix, [< A.S. -er], forming verbs: 1, denoting repeated action; as, glimmer; waver; 2, imitating sounds; as, titter; whisper.

e-ra (ē'rà), n. [< Lat. aera, era; orig., counters, pl. of aes (aeris), money], 1, a period of time starting from a given point or date; as, the Christian era; 2, a period with notable characteristics; as, a reconstruction era; 3, the point of time from which a series of years is reckoned: Geol., one of the five great divisions of time into which the geological history of the earth is divided (see geology, chart).

e-rad-i-cate (ē-răd'ĭ-kāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -cated, p.pr. -cating], [< Lat. e, out + radix (-icis), a root], to destroy completely; exterminate; erase; wipe out.—n. e-rad"i-ca'tion.—adj. e-rad'i-ca-tive (-kā-tĭv).—adv. e-rad'i-ca-bly (-kă-bl).

Syn. uproot, destroy, extirpate, exterminate. Literally, eradicate means to get out by the root; extirpate, to get out the very stock of; exterminate, to put beyond the borders of existence, and so, all three, to destroy utterly. Eradicate, though still applied literally to plants removed in numbers, is now commonly employed in the figurative sense; we eradicate evils, faults, or offensive mannerisms. Extirpate is used of that which is so thoroughly rooted out that it can never reappear, as a species of animal, a nation, or weeds. Figuratively, extirpate means stamp out, as plagues, heresies, vice, etc. Exterminate is applied to those things that have life; tribes, races, or animals are exterminated.

e-rase (ē-rāz'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. erased (-rāst'), p.pr. erasing], [< Lat. e, out + radere (rasus), to scrape], to remove by rubbing; scrape off; efface by friction.—adj. e-ras'a-ble (-ă-bl).

Syn. delete, efface, obliterate, cancel, expunge. These words refer, primarily, to the removal of written characters; they now have a figurative application as well, which is easily deduced from their literal use. To erase is to scrape or scratch out, usually in order to write something else in the space thus secured; to erase the chalk-made characters on a blackboard is simply to rub them out. To efface is to make illegible, sometimes by wiping or rubbing out, sometimes, as in the effect of weather upon inscriptions, by a gradual wearing process. To obliterate is utterly to remove, as a character or letter; time or accident may obliterate. To cancel is literally to cross out by a stroke or strokes made through the letters. To expunge, literally to take out by pricking with a sharp point, means now to blot out, as by ink spots, or to strike out, as by strokes with the pen. Figuratively, we erase a face from memory, expunge a passage from a book, efface a bad impression, cancel a social obligation, obliterate our identity.

e-ras-er (ē-rās'ẽr), n. 1, a device for rubbing out written marks: commonly made of rubber or felt; 2, one who effaces marks by rubbing out.

E-ras-mi-an (ē-răz'mĭ-ăn; ē-rās'-), adj. [< proper name], pertaining to Desiderius Erasmus (1466–1536), a famous Dutch scholar and theologian, and a leader of the humanist movement.

E-ras-tian (ē-rās'chən), adj. [< proper name, Erastus], 1, pertaining to Erastus, a Swiss theologian of the 16th century, or to his teachings; 2, maintaining the doctrine, popularly ascribed to Erastus, that the church should be under the control of the state:—n. a follower of Erastus or of his teachings.

e-ra-sure (ē-rā'zhûr), n. [see erase], 1, the act of blotting out; the state of being blotted out or effaced; 2, anything rubbed or scraped out; 3, the place where something has been erased.

Er-a-to (ĕr'ə-tō), n. [< Gk. Eratō, the lovely], Class. Myth., the muse of lyric and love poetry.

er-bi-um (ûr'bĭ-ŭm), n. [< (Yt)erby in Sweden], Chem., a rare metallic element [symbol Er] of the rare earth group.

ere (âr), conj. [< A.S. ær, before < O.Teut. source], Poet., 1, before; 2, rather than; as, I will fight ere I submit:—prep. before.

Er-e-bus (ĕr'ē-bŭs), n. [< Gk. Erebos], Class. Myth., a place of utter darkness through which the dead passed to Hades.

e-rect (ē-rĕkt'), v.t. [< Lat. erigere (erectus), to set up], 1, to raise to an upright position; 2, to build; establish, as a house; 3, to exalt; 4, to form; institute; 5, to cause to arise; as, prejudices erect social barriers:—v.i. Physiol., to become distended and rigid, as erectile tissue under excitement:—adj. 1, upright; vertical; 2, directed upward; 3, unshaken; not depressed. —adj. e-rec'tive.—n. e-rect'ness.—n. e-rec'tor.

e-rect-ile (ē-rĕk'tĭl), adj. capable of being raised upright: erectile tissue, Anat., tissue which is richly supplied with blood vessels and which, under excitement, becomes distended and rigid.

e-rec-tion (ē-rĕk'shŭn), n. 1, the act of raising upright or building, as a structure or wall; 2, the structure raised; 3, the state of being constructed: Physiol., the act of becoming, or state of being, rigid or distended: used of erectile tissue.

ere-long (âr'lông'), adv. [ere+long], before long; soon; shortly.

er-e-mite (ĕr'ē-mīt), n. [< Gk. erēmitēs, dweller in a desert], a recluse; a religious hermit.

ere-now (âr'nou'), adv. [ere+now], before now; heretofore. Also, ere now.

erg (ûrg), n. [< Gk. ergon, work], Phys., the unit of work or energy in the C. G. S. system, being the work expended in overcoming a resistance of one dyne over a distance of one centimeter: also called ergon.

er-go (ûr'gō), conj. and adv. [Lat. = therefore], therefore; consequently; hence.

er-gos-ter-ol (ûr-gŏs'tĕr-ōl; -ōl), n. [ergot + Gk. stereos, solid + suffix -ol], a substance once prepared from ergot but now especially from yeast, which when acted upon by ultraviolet rays produces a vitamin used to prevent or cure rickets.

er-got (ûr'gŏt), n. [< O.F. argot, cock's spur: from shape], a black, fungous growth on various grains, especially rye: the source of several drugs.

er-i-ca-ceous (ĕr'ĭ-kā'shŭs), adj. [< Gk. ereikē, heath], Bot., belonging to the heath family of shrubs, trees, and herbs, including the laurels, rhododendrons, azaleas, trailing arbutus, and others.

E-rin (ē'rĭn; ĕr'ĭn), n. [< Ir. Eire], Ireland: now used only in poetry.

E-rin-ys (ē-rī'nĭs; ē-rī'nĭs; ĕr-), n. [pl. Erinyes (ē-rĭn'ĭ-ēz)], [< Gk. Erinus, a Fury], Gk. Myth., any of the Greek Furies, Alecto, Tisiphone, or Megæra, who pursued and maddened unpunished criminals; one of the Eumenides. Also, E-rin'nys.

E-ris (ē'rĭs; ĕr'ĭs), n. [Gk. = strife], Gk. Myth., the goddess of discord or strife.

e-ter-nal (ē-tûr′năl), adj. [< Lat. aeternus < aeviternus, eternal < aevum, an age], 1, without beginning or end; everlasting; perpetual; unchangeable; 2, incessant; never ceasing: the Eternal, God. Also, Archaic or Poet., e-terne′.—adv. e-ter′nal-ly.

Syn. unceasing, unfailing, timeless, endless, everlasting, interminable, immortal, perpetual, ceaseless, uninterrupted, enduring. Eternal describes that which always has been and always shall be; as, the Eternal God. That which is everlasting may not always have existed, but it reaches uninterruptedly and unceasingly into the future without end. Eternal and everlasting are often interchangeable; as, eternal life, or life everlasting; even here, however, there is a slight distinction, for eternal stresses the nature, and everlasting the duration, of the thing described. Endless is partly synonymous with everlasting, but is used in many special senses, especially in mechanics, to mean continuous; as, an endless band or belt. Immortal describes that which, living, is deathless; as, the immortal soul; figuratively, immortal is interchangeable with everlasting; as, immortal fame. Interminable stresses the never-ending or limitless quality of a thing; as, the interminable stretches of the desert. Perpetual in its most extended sense means eternal; as, light perpetual: in a lesser sense, it means never ceasing; as, perpetual motion. Many of these words are used to connote boredom, wearisomeness, or monotony; as, an everlasting nuisance: endless nagging; perpetual giggling. Eternal, too, is sometimes used of finite but very great duration; as, eternal vigilance; the eternal snows.

e-ter-ni-ty (ē-tûr′nĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], [< Fr. éternité; see eternal], 1, the state of being infinite and everlasting; 2, unbegun and unending time, or the sphere of its existence; also, finite time that seems endless; as, an eternity of dreariness; 3, existence before earthly life or after death; loosely, immortality.

Syn. praise, encomium, panegyric. Praise is expressed approval of either a person or thing. Eulogy, encomium, and panegyric refer to modes of praising. A eulogy is a laudatory discourse addressed to an audience; it concerns persons rather than things, and, though usually formal and not infrequently extravagant in its commendation, it often possesses the merit of sincerity or truth. Panegyric also names a public address, usually about persons, but it differs from eulogy in being more elaborate, less judicious, and more apt to be based on servile rather than genuine admiration. An encomium may be delivered about either persons or things, but it usually concerns things; like the eulogy and the panegyric, it is formal, and often so high-flown as to be absurd.

Eu-men-i-des (ū-mĕn′ĭ-dēz), n.pl. [< Gk. eu, well + menos, temper: literally, gracious goddesses: name used for propitiation], Class. Myth., the avenging Furies; the Erinyes.

FELUCCA.

fem. abbr. feminine (also, f., F.).

fe-male (fē'māl), n. [< Lat. femella, dim. of femina, woman, influenced by male], an animal of the sex that bears offspring; specifically, a woman or girl: Bot., a plant or flower that bears the pistil, and receives the pollen; generally, a pistillate plant; Zoöl., the egg-producing individual of a bisexual animal:—adj. designating, or pertaining to, the sex that produces young: Mech., designating a part fitted to receive a corresponding part within it, as the inside thread of a pipe fitting or a nut; Bot., having pistils without stamens; Zoöl., pertaining to the egg-producing individual.—n. fe'male-ness.

Syn., adj. feminine, womanly, womanlike, womanish. To the sex of women we apply the word female; as opposed to male, it applies to animals and plants as well as to human beings. Though we still sometimes read of a female slave, female suffrage, or female education, female in nonbiological senses has been displaced by feminine. Feminine is applied to qualities distinguishing women, or things appropriate to them: we speak of feminine slightness or delicacy; feminine apparel; a truly feminine remark; feminine features. Womanly is applied to those qualities of womankind that are sweetly becoming or endearing; we speak of womanly sympathy or tact, but of feminine cattiness. Womanish is a contemptuous term, connoting, whether applied to men or women, the weaker and less likable qualities of the sex. Faults due to an excess of femininity are excused, often indulged; as, feminine weakness at the sight of blood; such weakness in a man would be reproachfully termed womanish. Womanlike is used respectfully, like womanly, but it lacks the latter's warmth of tone; as, womanlike, she fainted when the danger was over.

feme (fēm), n. [< Fr. femme, woman], Law, a woman; wife: feme covert (kŭv'ĕrt), a married woman: feme sole (sōl), a single woman, whether spinster, widow, or divorcée. Also, femme (fäm).

FLAGS OF THE LEADING NATIONS OF THE WORLD

THE ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF FLAGS

ALTHOUGH in remote ages men were accustomed to display objects of various kinds as emblems of nationality, leadership, or allegiance, it is not until the Middle Ages that we come upon the earliest traces of what may properly be called flags.

As early as the Norman conquest, however, bits of cloth of various forms—square, rounded, swallow-tailed, or many-pointed—were borne at the lance head by warrior knights, and the court heralds issued minute prescriptions as to the forms and uses of the standard, banner, pennon, guidon, and a number of other flags that had come into use.

Originally the flag, like the coat of arms, was simply the personal emblem of the lord or knight. Sometimes, as in the case of the standard, it was emblazoned with complete armorial bearings; at others, as in the case of the small flags carried by esquires and retainers, it merely showed his colors or bore a simple device.

But in course of time the flag of a lord naturally came to be looked upon as the flag of the people over whom he ruled, and in many instances it remained the flag of that people, though the lord whom it symbolized, or his line, passed from power. Thus the flag of the former Austrian republic bore the ancient colors of the dukes of Austria, and the flag of Greece displays the colors of Bavaria.

But not every national banner that can boast a heraldic origin is derived from the banner of a lord. Religious banners flourished in the Middle Ages, side by side with the banners of chivalry. One of these often became the cherished emblem of a people, as did the famous oriflamme of St. Denis, last carried by the French at Agincourt. By the thirteenth century, the cross of St. George was the characteristic emblem of England, just as the cross of St. Andrew was emblematic of the Scots. Today we see them, together with Ireland's cross of St. Patrick, united in the British union jack.

But whether derived from military or from religious banners, until the latter part of the eighteenth century national flags were constructed according to heraldic principles, and in most instances were derived from insignia originating in the distant past. With the flags of the more recently established nations, as the South American republics, the case is often otherwise. Republics are inclined to discard heraldry entirely, as savoring of monarchy, and to adopt such colors and design as appeal to the people at the time.

Oldest among the national flags of the present day is the flag of Denmark, to which legend assigns the date of 1219, and which, aside from legend, is known to have been flown by the Danes ever since the thirteenth century. Almost as ancient is the flag of Switzerland, which certainly dates from the fourteenth century, if not earlier, and which has given the pattern and colors to the flag of the Red Cross. Another ancient and honorable flag is that of the Netherlands, which in its present form has flown the seas since 1650, but which, with an orange stripe in place of the red, is of much greater antiquity. The Dutch flag carried to America by Hendrik Hudson in 1608 bore the orange stripe and not the red; and the flag which Columbus planted in the soil of the New World was not the present flag of Spain, but the older Spanish banner, bearing a quartering of the arms of Castile and León.

Although we still think of the United States as a young republic, few flags can boast a longer continuous history as a national emblem than can the Stars and Stripes. Adopted by Congress on June 14, 1777, it has waved on high for 150 years. The present flag of Spain was adopted in 1785; the tricolor of France in 1795 (with the red and blue stripes interchanged, four years earlier); the British union jack in 1800, although, without the cross of St. Patrick, it dates from 1606. The flags of Belgium, Italy, Greece, Germany, and most of the other European nations are of later origin, while no other American flag antedates the nineteenth century.

As to its origin, opinions differ. According to one theory it was inspired by the flag of Holland; according to another it was derived from the arms of the Washingtons (see colored illustration of heraldry); while still a third maintains that it was but the red ensign of Great Britain, with the red field broken by white stripes, and the canton replaced by a starry canton containing one star for each of the thirteen colonies.

The famous Fort McHenry flag which inspired the writing of "The Star Spangled Banner" differs from our present national flag in one respect. For 23 years, from 1795 to 1818, the national banner held 15 stripes instead of 13. The original flag ordinance prescribed that on the admission of each new State, a stripe, as well as a star, should be added to the flag. On January 13, 1794, stars and stripes were added for Vermont and Kentucky.

Until 1818 the flag contained 15 stripes and 15 stars. But by that time five more States had been added to the Union, with further additions in prospect. A flag of 20 or more stripes was deemed out of the question, and on April 4, 1818, Congress restored the original number of stripes to the flag, providing that on the admission of each new State, a star, but not a stripe, should be added to the flag on the Fourth of July next succeeding.

And so the flag has remained except for the addition of new stars, the number of which was raised to 48 on July 4, 1912, by the addition of two stars to represent New Mexico (admitted January 6) and Arizona (admitted February 14).

flu-or (flo͞o'ôr), n. [Lat. = a flow], Mineral., calcium fluoride, a mineral occurring in crystalline form: a common name for fluorite, which see.

flu-o-resce (flo͞o"ō-rĕs'), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -resced, (-rĕst'), p.pr. -rescing], [< Lat. fluere, to flow], Phys., to give off, under the action of light, a color different from that reflected or transmitted by the body; become luminous when exposed to radiation.

flu-o-res-cence (flo͞o"ō-rĕs'ĕns), n. Phys., 1, the property of certain substances which, when in solution or otherwise under the action of light, emit light of a color differing from their reflected or transmitted color; the property by which certain substances become luminous when exposed to X rays or other forms of radiation; 2, the light thus produced.—adj. flu"o-res'cent.

flu-or-ic (flo͞o-ôr'ĭk), adj. [see fluor], Chem., pertaining to, or obtained from, fluorine.

flu-o-ride (flo͞o'ō-rīd), n. Chem., a salt of hydrofluoric acid. Also, flu'or-id.

flu-o-rine (flo͞o'ō-rēn; flo͞o'ō-rĭn), n. Chem., a gaseous element [symbol F], of penetrating and disagreeable odor, capable of corroding glass, and attacking with violence organic compounds: found in nature in the mineral fluorite. Also, flu'or-in.

flu-o-rite (flo͞o'ō-rīt), n. Mineral., a common mineral, calcium fluoride, occurring in colored or sometimes transparent crystals, commonly in cubes with perfect octahedral cleavage (see replacement, illus.): used as a flux in the preparation of hydrofluoric acid, and for making lenses for scientific instruments: also called fluor; fluor spar.

flu-o-ro-scope (flo͞o'ō-rō-skōp; flo͞o-ôr'ō-skōp). n. [< Lat. fluor, a flow + Gk. skopein, to see], a box adjustable to the eyes, containing a screen covered with a fluorescent material, used with X rays in making examinations of deep-seated parts of the body.

flu-or-os-co-py (flo͞o"ôr-ŏs'kō-pĭ), n. the examination of opaque objects by the use of an instrument called a fluoroscope, which reveals the shadows cast by X rays.

flu-or spar Mineral., native fluoride of calcium: used as a flux: also called fluor; fluorite.

flur-ry (flûr'ĭ), v.t. [p.t. and p.p -ried (-Id), p.pr. -rying], [imit., perh. < flaw + hurry], to agitate, confuse, or bewilder:—n. [pl. -ries (-Iz)], 1, a sudden commotion; hurry; 2, a sudden gust; squall.

1flush (flŭsh), v.t. [imit., perh. < fl(ash) + (bl)ush], 1, to redden; cause to blush; 2, to encourage; excite; thrill; 3, to wash or cleanse by means of a strong flow of water:—v.i. 1, to blush; glow; 2, to become full of water:—n. 1, a blush; glow; 2, a sudden rush, as of water; 3, a thrill; excitement; 4, an even or unbroken surface:—adj. 1, full; 2, abundantly supplied, as with money; 3, vigorous; 4, even; level; forming a continuous surface, as with an edge; as, nail the board flush with the corner: flush deck, Naut., a deck level from stem to stern:—adv. evenly; straight; squarely.

fore-tell (fōr-tĕl′), v.t. [fore- + tell], to predict or prophesy; tell beforehand:—v.i. to utter a prophecy or prediction.

Syn. forecast, predict, presage, prophesy, forebode, portend. These words agree in the idea of telling beforehand what is to occur. Foretell is the general and familiar term, and requires only ordinary ability or intelligence. Predict is now used chiefly of events that can be calculated, as astronomical occurrences, and requires suitable mental training. Sometimes predict is used of those events which can be deduced from what has already happened; as, to predict mutiny or war. Formerly predict connoted the possession of supernatural powers of foretelling, and this sense still lingers among those who tell fortunes, read palms, or the like. To prophesy is to foretell under the influence of inspiration; scripturally, to prophesy is to explain and interpret, as does one to whom God has revealed his truth. To forecast resembles predict, but it is more conjectural than inferential, though it is used almost entirely now of weather prognostications, and in this connection is, of course, calculative. To presage, forebode, and portend foretoken evil. To forebode is to apprehend evil in some obscure way; people "feel it in their bones." To portend is to foreshadow evil, especially in an ominous and threatening way; as, these clashes portend civil war. To presage is often to draw a conclusion about the future from what the present is; as, to presage the spread of a disease. Sometimes presage carries a note of warning; as, the dead, still air presaged a storm. Forecast, foretell, prophesy, and predict are used only of persons; portend, only of things; forebode or presage, of either persons or things.

fore-thought (fōr′thôt″), n. [fore- + thought], 1, a planning out beforehand; deliberate intention; 2, heed for the future; prudence.

Syn. premeditation, anticipation. (See wisdom.)

forg-ing (fōr′jĭng; fôr′jĭng), n. [see ¹forge], any piece of metal which has been shaped while hot by hammering or pressing: usually in reference to a large piece shaped under a press, or a piece of any size which has been hammered: forging hammer, a large machine for shaping metal pieces by hammering.

for-give (fôr-giv'), v.t. [<A.S. forgiefan <for-, from +giefan, to give], 1, to pardon (an offense or an offender); 2, to remit (a debt or a debtor):—v.i. to display clemency or leniency.—adj. for-giv'a-ble.—n. for-giv'er.

Syn. pardon, excuse, condone, remit, overlook, absolve. To forgive is the act of one who has been offended or wronged; it not only lifts punishment or consequences from the offender, but restores him to an unresentful place in the affections of the offended one. Hence, forgive is the familiar term for the reëstablishing of broken personal relationships. A pardon is the act of a superior, and emphasizes the removal of the consequences of a fault or crime; it is a question of justice, and not of personal feelings: a governor or a judge may pardon, yet still harbor unforgiving feelings against the offender if the wrong done touches him personally. A sinner restored to the grace of God through repentance is both forgiven and pardoned. To condone is to wink at an offense; one who condones sees the offense, but, expressly or tacitly, ignores it. To excuse is to release from blame in slight respects, as for a lack of ceremony, absence from school, or the like; excuse me, and, by courtesy, pardon me in the same sense, are used as conventional expressions of apology. To remit is to refrain from exacting a penalty or consequence; we may remit part of another's debt to us; a judge may remit part of a sentence.

for-give-ness (fôr-giv'nĕs), n. 1, pardon; remission; 2, readiness to pardon.

Syn. pardon, leniency, forbearance. (See mercy.)

fort-night (fôrt'nīt), n. [< A.S. fēorwertyne niht, fourteen nights], a period of two weeks.—adj. and adv. fort'night-ly.

for-tress (fôr'trĕs), n. [< O.F. forteresse, strength < Lat. fortis, strong], Mil., a large place, permanently fortified for defense; a castle; fort.

for-tu-i-tous (fôr-tū'ĭ-tŭs), adj. [< Lat. fortuitus, accidental < fors (fortis), chance], occurring by chance or accident; casual.—adv. for-tu'i-tous-ly.—n. for-tu'i-tous-ness.

Syn. contingent, incidental, accidental, casual, random, occasional. Accidental, incidental, casual, and fortuitous are terms descriptive of events or circumstances that happen without intention or premeditation. Accidental describes that which occurs without plan; as, an accidental meeting; or as the result of carelessness or chance; as, an accidental injury; an accidental bit of good fortune. Incidental describes a happening that occurs in connection with a greater or more important event. An incidental remark grows out of a discussion, and is relevant to it, but it is subordinate and unpremeditated, as are incidental expenses on a journey. Fortuitous describes events that occur wholly through chance; a fortuitous occurrence or coincidence is often a happy one. Columbus's discovery of America was accidental and fortuitous, and incidental to his main purpose as well. Casual describes that which occurs outside the regular course of events; a casual caller drops in unexpectedly. Casual carries relative unimportance as well as irregularity in its meaning; a casual remark is irrelevant and matters nothing; a casual warning falls on deaf ears. Contingent describes that which is unlooked for, and hence unprepared for; it is opposed to that which is definitely fixed. Contingent also describes a happening that is the result of unforeseen or unforeseeable conditions, and so gathers the meaning of dependent; as, our success is contingent upon your coöperation. Occasional, like casual, describes that which is undesigned and comparatively infrequent; but the occasional happening grows out of some special juncture of events, while the casual event occurs without apparent cause.—Ant. planned, foreseen, premeditated.

for-tu-i-ty (fôr-tū'ĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], 1, an accidental occurrence; 2, chance.

For-tu-na (fôr-tū'nă), n. [Lat. = fortune], Rom. Myth., the goddess of fortune or chance: identified with the Greek Tyche.

for-tu-nate (fôr'tū-nāt), adj. [< Lat. fortuna, chance], 1, happening by good fortune; opportune; 2, lucky; successful.—adv. for'tu-nate-ly.—n. for'tu-nate-ness.

Syn. (see happy, lucky).—Ant. unlucky, calamitous.

for-tune (fôr'tŭn), n. 1, the good or ill that happens to mankind; chance; fate; 2, the personified power regarded as determining good or ill luck; 3, estate; possessions: especially in terms of money; 4, a forecast of one's future:—v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -tuned (-tŭnd), p.pr. -tuning], to come to pass casually:—v.t. to endow with a fortune.

Syn., n. luck, fate, chance, destiny, property, possessions, riches.—Ant., n. misfortune, poverty, loss.

for-tune hunt-er one who seeks wealth, especially through marriage.

for-tune tell-er one who claims ability to foretell events in the lives of others.

for-ty (fôr'tĭ), adj. [< A.S. fēowertig, forty], four times ten:—n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], 1, the sum of four tens; 2, a symbol denoting forty units, as 40 or xl: Forty Thieves, a band of robbers in the "Arabian Nights' Entertainments."—n. and adj. for'ti-eth.

fo-rum (fō'rŭm), n. [pl. forums (-rŭmz); fora (-rȧ)], [Lat. = market place], 1, one of the public places of meeting in Rome and other ancient cities where the law courts, public offices, etc., were situated; 2, a place of public resort, or court of law; 3, a gathering for public discussion.

Ground plan of the forum of Pompeii, and some of the principal surrounding buildings: A, main entrance; B, a Corinthian temple; C, temple of Venus; D, basilica; E, a portico; F, temple of Mercury.

for-ward (fôr'wĕrd), adv. [< A.S. foreweard < fore-, ahead + -weard, in the direction < wcorthan, to turn], onward; in advance; toward the fore part:—adj. 1, situated near the front; 2, early in season; advanced; precocious; 3, ready; prompt; 4, eager; earnest; 5, pert; bold; impertinent; 6, radical; extreme: Com.,

REPRESENTATIVE FLOWERS OF NORTH AMERICA

1, aster (Aster novæ-angliæ); 2, laurel (Kalmia latifolia); 3, wood lily (Lilium philadelphicum); 4, coneflower (Rudbeckia laciniata); 5, lady's-slipper (Cypripedium pubescens); 6, mountain columbine (Aquilegia cærulea); 7, eastern columbine (Aquilegia canandensis); 8, cardinal flower (Lobelia cardinalis); 9, shooting star (Dodecatheon meadia); 10, azalea (Rhododendron nudiflorum); 11, pasqueflower (Anemone patens); 12, fringed gentian (Gentianella crinita); 13, Mariposa lily (Calochortus nuttallii); 14, pitcher plant (Sarracenia purpurea); 15, violet (Viola pedatifida), 16, bitterroot (Lewisia rideviva); 17, cactus (Echinocereus fendleri).

(See other side.)

THE New England aster (1) and the coneflower (4) are members of the largest and most highly developed family of plants, the composite family. Both are widespread east of the Rocky Mountains, and blossom in the early autumn. Their flowers are arranged in heads, each of which looks like a single flower with a brilliant circle of raylike petals; but in reality each head is a cluster of many flowers of two kinds, small disk flowers in the center, each forming a single seed, and large outer petal-like ray flowers, usually sterile. This is the characteristic formation in one division of the Compositæ; in the other, represented by the dandelion, the heads contain only ray flowers.

The mountain laurel, or calico bush (2), the State flower of Connecticut, is a member of the heath family. It blooms on waste rocky hillsides in early summer, and is widespread in eastern North America. It is closely related to the rhododendron, and to the azalea (10).

Though not the largest or showiest of the orange-red wild lilies, the wood lily (3) is one of the most widespread. It grows in patches, blooming in early summer, the leaves and flower stalks standing two or three feet high. In the prairies of the Middle West it is redder than in the East. Like most members of the lily family, it has three sepals and three petals, colored alike, and simple parallel-veined leaves.

Probably the best known of our wild species of the orchid family are the yellow (5) and the pink cypripedium, or lady's-slipper, widely though not abundantly spread east of the Rockies. The large saclike lip, suggesting a wooden shoe, gave it its name. The pink lady's-slipper is the State flower of Minnesota.

The columbines (6, 7) belong to the crowfoot family. Each spur of the flower conceals at its base a sac full of nectar, which yields food for long-tongued insects, or for certain bees which, though short-tongued, are wise enough to obtain the nectar by boring through the thin wall. The lavender-and-white species, with strikingly long spurs, is the state flower of Colorado. From it and its red-and-yellow cousin are derived many of the long-spurred hybrid varieties cultivated in our gardens.

Most of the lobelias are blue or white, but the cardinal flower (8) is a brilliant exception. Standing two to four feet high, often solitary, it is found at the water's edge along lakes and streams of the eastern United States and Canada, blooming in late August or early September. Once seen it is seldom forgotten.

The shooting star (9), so named from its rather peculiar shape, though sometimes called American cowslip, belongs to the primrose family. It is a spring flower, blooming abundantly on the prairies and moist cliffs in the central regions from Manitoba to Texas and as far east as Pennsylvania and Maryland. The color varies from a deep magenta through lighter shades to white.

The purple azalea (10) is found growing wild in the eastern United States. Blooming in May before the leaves are out on the trees and bushes, it forms beautiful shimmering patches of pale or deep rose against the background of the brown woods. In colonial days it was taken to Europe and crossed with a Dutch variety, the result being the broad, flat-topped azalea now sold in pots at Easter.

The pasque flower (11) is the most showy of the anemones. This species may be found blooming in early spring northwestward of the Mississippi River. It often shoots up through rocks where no other plants appear. The name of this flower, derived from Old French pasque, Passover, Easter, probably originated in Europe, where it blooms in the spring, at about the time of the Passover and Easter.

The fringed gentian (12), though not abundant, is the best known of the gentian family. It is to be found blossoming in the fall in low grounds from western Quebec south to Georgia and westward to Iowa and the Dakotas.

The Mariposa lily (13), in several species, grows from the Coast ranges eastward to the Rockies, bearing interesting bell-shaped flowers, which may be yellow, white, or lilac, nodding or erect, wide open or closed. One species is the State flower of Utah.

Some of the most curious and interesting plants belong to the pitcher plant family, so named from the hollow leaves which usually contain some water. Our northern species (14) is found in cranberry and peat bogs. The water in the pitcherlike leaves is generally found to contain a number of drowned insects. These have found it easy to crawl in, as the hairs lining the leaf all point downward; but not so easy to crawl out again, against the hairs. Their dead bodies are supposed to supply the plant with some food. The leaves, as well as the flowers, are beautifully colored in red, brown, and green.

The bird's-foot violet (15), named from the resemblance of the deeply cut leaf to a bird's foot, is one of the daintiest of the many species of its family. Though not so common as its darker cousins, this variety is found widely distributed in the eastern and central States.

The bitterroot (16), adopted as the State flower of Montana, represents one type of xerophytic, or dry-region, plant. The root is the main part, living through the long dry months of the year. During the short moist period, the small stem part throws up a few slender leaves, which present very little exposure to the parching sun, and the brilliantly colored flowers. After a brief outburst, the leaves die down and the whole plant lies dormant till the next rainy season. Another type of xerophyte is the cactus (17), the State flower of New Mexico. Its leaves are reduced to spines, the green stem making the plant food when there is sufficient water. It is a slow-growing plant, able to store up moisture enough in the fleshy stems to carry it over the dry periods. Some species carry rather large quantities in storage, as the barrel cactus. Although edible, their thorny covering protects them from all animals but man.

future; relating to the future or future delivery; as, forward buying:—interj. on!—v.t. 1, to help or send onward; quicken or hasten; facilitate; 2, to transmit; transport to destination: Com., specifically, to receive (goods) at an intermediate point and provide or arrange for transportation to the ultimate destination; send on (a letter once delivered) to another address; Bookbinding, to prepare (a book) for the finisher by putting on covers and back, trimming, etc.—adv. for'ward-ly.—n. for'ward-ness.—n. for'ward-er.

PERIOD FURNITURE

The term "period furniture" is suggestive of the attempt, developed since 1850, to classify various types of antique furniture in groups according to the period of their origin and popularity. These groups are named either after the monarchs, English or French, under whom given styles of furniture flourished, or after the designers of given styles.

American colonial furniture is classified in two ways. Since the colonial period extended over nearly a century and a half, the productions of that time are sometimes designated, when accurate classification is desired, by date or by the name of the English sovereign during whose reign the English cabinetmakers produced the examples which American workmen followed. A more convenient classification, however, recognizes three more or less distinct colonial periods:

(a) The early, primitive period, represented mainly by chests or chairs which were made by local carpenters to supply individual needs, and were based, consciously or unconsciously, upon Jacobean or earlier models. Such pieces are distinctly utilitarian and owe whatever beauty they may possess to the sincerity and innate artistry of the workman rather than to studied effort.

(b) A later period, showing conscious copying of the styles of the great English cabinetmakers, Chippendale, Heppelwhite, and the others, by professional American cabinetmakers. In this period much of structural strength was sacrificed for grace, elegance, and lightness of contour and ornament.

(c) The American Empire period, notable for the coldness and formality of design, and often poor taste, characteristic of the Empire period in Europe, but relieved by some American pieces, especially the sofas and certain chairs, of excellent workmanship.

I. JACOBEAN (see 1, 9, 17 in the illustration opposite). Period, 1603–88, covering the reigns of the Stuart kings of England. The latter part of the period, 1660–88, is called the Carolean.

A. Characteristics: Strength and massiveness; straight lines; excess of decorative carving, inlay, gilding, etc.; general use of oak, walnut, and, in America, maple.

B. Special features: 1, Flemish and Spanish influence, seen in use of decorated leather and of scroll feet (9); 2, carved stretcher, or horizontal bracing crosspiece, between front legs (9); 3, high, paneled back, square seat, and turned front legs in chairs; 4, heavily carved, bulbous table legs, bedposts, etc. (1); 5, in Carolean period, use of spiral turned legs, very elaborate stretcher (17), Flemish scroll work; baroque ornament; upholstery for seats and backs of chairs and sofas.

II. WILLIAM AND MARY (8). Period, 1688–1702.

A. Characteristics: Dutch style; gorgeousness of color; tendency toward simplicity of line and less elaboration in carving. The highboy, the tall clock case, and, in America, the rush-bottom chair originated in this period.

B. Special features: 1, perpendicular legs, turned like trumpets, spindles, or inverted cups; 2, flattened, rounded feet called bun feet; 3, hooded or straight unornamented tops; 4, ogee curves; 5, low stretchers between legs; 6, apron fronts; 7, use of needlework for upholstery, and of marquetry and lacquer for decoration.

III. QUEEN ANNE (3, 4, 6, 12). Period, 1702–14.

A. Characteristics: Plainness of surface and grace of line; double curves; disappearance of stretchers; first general use of mahogany. The Windsor chair (12) originated in this period.

B. Special features: 1, curved legs, often carved to represent a scroll, a shell, an animal's paw grasping a ball, or the like; 2, gracefully curved fiddle-shaped splat, or upright central member, in backs of chairs; 3, club or hoof feet; 4, tops with pediments showing broken hood or broken double curve, with torch-shaped ornament at center (4); 5, cockleshell or sun ray ornament (4); 6, straight apron varied with small curves; 7, ogee, serpentine curve, and scroll as motives in contour and decorative carving; 8, drop leaves in table.

IV. FRENCH PERIODS.

LOUIS QUATORZE. Period, parallel to I, II, and III in England.

Characteristics: Rectilinear structure with dignity and height.

LOUIS QUINZE (16). Period: 1715–74.

Characteristics: Structural lines fancifully curved; rococo ornamentation; swelled fronts for chests and cabinets; carving, lacquer, veneer, marquetry and buhl, or inlaid work; curved legs as in the Queen Anne period; broad chair seats, with comfortable backs set in frame of compound curves and short, flaring arms.

LOUIS SEIZE (18). Period, 1774–93.

Characteristics: Return to classic rectilinear structure, a few simple curves remaining, especially in chair seats, backs, and arms; tapering vertical legs, either round and turned or fluted, or square and fluted; conventional floral decoration in carving and upholstery.

V. CHIPPENDALE (2). Period, 1729–79; named for the first famous English cabinetmaker, and best exemplified in chairs.

A. Characteristics: Combination of best qualities in existing styles, with added grace, craftsmanship, and comfort; variety of styles, English, French, Gothic, and Chinese; flowing lines and artistic carving; dignity and flexibility of contour.

B. Special features: 1, in chairs, (a) curved and straight legs; (b) broad curving backs with flaring corners and a top rail somewhat like a cupid's bow, sometimes having a splat cut into interlacing or fretted patterns; (c) ladder backs (15), or square, hooped, or serpentine-top backs filled with tracery or fretwork; (d) large square seats, upholstered, often with curved or carved front rail; (e) grooving, carving, or turning on straight legs; carved knees on curved legs; stretchers used with straight legs; (f) club, leaf, claw-and-ball, and other types of feet; 2, four-poster bedsteads; 3, in tables, oval or semicircular drop leaves; 4, general use of curved legs and claw-and-ball feet; 5, many types of cabinets and cupboards; 6, mirrors with elaborately carved and gilded frames; 7, lion, acanthus, shell, pagoda, pointed arch, etc., as carving motives.

VI. ADAM (7). Period during which style was prevalent, 1762–92. The brothers Adam were architects, who designed but did not execute furniture.

A. Characteristics: Revolution in design due to a return to classic spirit; lighter and more graceful contour, almost entirely in straight lines; vase or urn forms as ornament; small, refined decorative moldings, with no elaborate or heavy carving. The console cabinet originated here.

B. Special features: 1, square or round tapered legs, with spade or block feet; 2, square upholstered chair seats, sometimes rounded at back; 3, square, round, or oval chair backs, the most characteristic pattern being the wheel; 4, small, dainty decorative designs, with floral or animal motives or motives from classical architecture.

VII. HEPPELWHITE (5). Period of style, 1729–86: a style rather than a period, because contemporaneous with Chippendale and the brothers Adam. The sideboard originated here.

A. Characteristics: Combination of Adam and Louis Seize styles; grace, lightness, and beauty of contour; decorative use of inlay and color rather than carving.

B. Special features: 1, return to use of curved line; 2, chairbacks in shield, hoop, and interlacing heart shapes; 3, straight, slender, tapering legs, usually square; 4, same decorative motives as in Adam furniture.

VIII. SHERATON (11). Period of style, until 1806: sometimes called English Louis Seize. Sheraton was the last of the great English cabinetmakers.

A. Characteristics: Use of straight line contour on classical models; use of inlay for decoration; restraint and simplicity; well-balanced distribution of ornament.

B. Special features: 1, rectangular chairback designs in varied patterns; 2, high-shouldered cabinets and cupboards on perpendicular lines (10); 3, square or round tapering legs; 4, cane seats and backs in chairs and settees.

IX. EMPIRE (13, 14). Period, 1793–1830, in France, England, and America. Style artificial, ornate, heavy, and vulgar, but less so in America than in Europe. The best cabinetmaker was Duncan Phyfe, sometimes called the American Sheraton.

A. Characteristics: Straight lines, heavy contour and carving, massiveness in large pieces, as bedsteads and sideboards.

B. Special features: 1, Jeffersonian chair (13) with broad, curving top rail, straight or outward curving legs, and a square seat, often of rush or cane; 2, Phyfe chair (14), an adaptation of this, with the lyre in the back as the distinctive feature; 3, use by Phyfe of brass mounts as handles or feet; 4, introduction of pedestal tables.

gas mask a covering for the face worn by soldiers in warfare, to prevent the inhaling of poison gas: also called gas helmet.

gas me-ter an apparatus for measuring the number of cubic feet of gas produced at a gas works, or consumed by those using it for light or fuel.

gas-o-line (găs'ō-lēn; găs'ō-lĭn), n. [gas+-oline (< Lat. oleum, oil)], a liquid distilled from petroleum or obtained from natural gas, highly volatile and inflammable and capable of rapid evaporation: used as a fuel in heating, cooking, etc., as a solvent, especially of fats, as in cleaning, and as a source of power in internal-combustion motors, as in automobiles, motor boats, airplanes, etc. Also, gas'o-lene.

gas-om-e-ter (găs-ŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [gas + meter], a large, round reservoir, built of iron plates, for storing a large volume of gas, especially ordinary illuminating gas.

gasp (găsp), n. [< O.N. geispa, to yawn], a quick, painful effort to catch the breath:—v.i. to catch the breath with difficulty:—v.t. to breathe out in quick, painful breaths: with away, out, etc.

gas pipe a pipe for conveying gas, especially illuminating gas. Also, n. gas'pipe".

GAS ENGINE

A, four-cycle engine: a, intake valve; b, exhaust valve.—1, piston ready to start down, drawing in gas mixture at a; 2, piston ready to start up, compressing mixture; 3, spark, occurring at time of greatest compression, explodes gas mixture and forces piston down; 4, rising piston forces out spent exhaust gas at b: on next down stroke a fresh charge will be drawn in.

B, two-cycle engine.—1, at top of stroke: spark explodes compressed mixture in cylinder, and drives piston down, compressing in the closed crank case, a, gas mixture which has entered at b during up stroke; 2, at bottom of stroke: spent gases escape at c; fresh mixture, admitted from crank case at a, is deflected upward by baffle plate and is compressed ready for ignition as rising piston closes both c and d.

gas plant an establishment or works for the manufacture of gas: also called gas works.

a, a, distilled soft coal in air-tight retorts; b, hydraulic main; c, condenser; d, tank filled with coke over which water is sprayed as at e; f, purifier; g, smoke flue gas-tral-gi-a (găs-trăl'jĭ-ă), n. [<Gk. gastēr, stomach + algos, pain], Pathol., pain especially of a neuralgic type, in the stomach.

gas-tric (găs'trĭk), adj. [<Gk. gastēr (-tros), stomach], affecting, or pertaining to, the stomach: gastric juice, a thin, watery, acid, digestive liquid secreted by glands in the lining of the stomach.

gas-tri-tis (găs-trī'tĭs), n. Pathol., inflammation of the stomach, especially of its lining.

gas-tron-o-my (găs-trŏn'ō-mĭ), n. [<Gk. gastēr, stomach + nomos, a rule], the art of eating, or of preparing, appetizing food; epicurism.—adj. gas'tro-nom'ic; gas'tro-nom'i-cal.

gas-tro-pod (găs'trō-pŏd), n. [<Gk. gastēr, stomach + pous (podos), foot], Zoöl., any one of a class of mollusks (Gastropoda), including most mollusks having a one-piece, spirally coiled shell, as snails, and some without shells, as slugs. Also, gas'ter-o-pod.—adj. gas-trop'o-dous.

gas-tru-la (găs'trōō-lă), n. [pl. -læ (-lē)], [L. dim. < Gk. gastēr, stomach], Zoöl., a form or stage in the growth of an embryo, typically cup-shaped, consisting of a sac of two layers of cells inclosing a central cavity, with an opening at one end.—n. gas'tru-la'tion.

SECTION OF GASTRULA OF AMPHIOXUS at the gastrula stage: A, endoderm; B, ectoderm.

[1]gate (gāt), n. [<A.S. geat, a gate], 1, an opening to allow entrance or passage; 2, a frame or door which opens or closes such an entrance; especially, such a frame for an opening in a fence; 3, a stately entrance to a city, castle, etc.; 4, a valve or door to stop or permit a flow of water; 5, a frame in which a saw or set of saws is fitted; 6, in metallurgy, a channel or opening made in sand or in a mold into which molten metal is poured when casting: Obs., the government of Turkey; the Porte; Colloq., the total sum of money paid for admissions, as to a baseball game:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. gated, p.pr. gating], in English universities, to punish by confining to the grounds.

a, seats; b, wedge, or gate; c, c, flanges; d, valve body; e, stem, which moves up and down with wedge, but does not turn; f, packing box; g, handle wheel; h, threaded portion of stem.

[2]gate (gāt), n. [<O.N. gata, road], Obs. or Sc., 1, method or manner of doing; 2, a way; a road.

gate-post (gāt'pōst"), n. [gate + post], a post on which a gate swings or is latched.

gate valve Mech., a valve which when open leaves an orifice the full size of the connecting pipe: so called because closed by a transverse metal plate, called a gate.

gate-way (gāt'wā"), n. [gate + way], 1, that which gives access; 2, an entrance fitted with a frame or door; 3, the structure guiding a saw frame.

gath-er (găth'ẽr), v.t. [<A.S. gaderian, to gather], 1, to assemble or bring together; collect; bring into one place; 2, to pick up, glean, or pluck; as, to gather a harvest; 3, to amass or gain, as a fortune; 4, to summon; concentrate, as energies; 5, to gain or recover, as breath; 6, to infer or conclude; 7, to pucker or plait;—v.i. 1, to congregate; 2, to become inflamed, as an abscess, and generate pus; 3, to increase:—n. a series of folds in cloth, drawn together on a thread.—n. gath'er-er.

gen-tian (jĕn′shăn), n. [< Lat. gentiana < Gentius king of Illyria, who discovered the virtue of the plant], 1, Bot., any of a genus (Gentiana) of herbs of temperate climates, usually bearing beautiful blue flowers (see flower, colored illus.); 2, the root of the yellow gentian, the extract of which is used as a stomachic.

gen-tile (jĕn′tīl), n. [< Fr. gentil < Lat. gentilis, of the same clan], in Roman law, a member of the same clan or tribe: Gram., a word derived from the name of a country and denoting its people: Gentile, originally, one not a Jew; among Christians, one not a Christian or a Jew: a pagan; among Mormons, one outside their church:—adj. 1, pertaining to the same family or tribe; clannish; 2, denoting nationality or race; as, Italian is a gentile noun; 3, pagan: Gentile, pertaining to a Gentile.

gen-til-i-ty (jĕn-tĭl′ĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], [see gentle], 1, behavior suitable for polite society; elegance of manner; good breeding; 2, rarely, the fashionable, upper-class world: Obs., gentle birth.

gen-tle (jĕn′tĭ), adj. [comp. -tler, superl. -tlest], [< O.F. gentil < Lat. gentilis, of good birth], 1, well-born; specifically, belonging to the gentry in distinction from the nobility; 2, showing good breeding; refined in manner and disposition; kindly; 3, moderate in action; not rough; 4, peaceful; docile; 5, not precipitous, as a slope: Archaic, generous; courteous; as, gentle reader:—n. the larva of the bluebottle or flesh fly: Archaic, a gentleman:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -tled (-tld), p.pr. -tling], 1, to make kind or easy; 2, to train; make docile, as a horse: Obs., to raise to the position of a gentleman.—n. gen'tle-ness.—adv. gen'tly.

Syn., adj. placid, soft, soothing, bland, docile, tame.

gen-tle-folk (jĕn'tl-fōk″), n.pl. [gentle+folk], persons of good family or breeding.

gen-tle-man (jĕn'tl-măn), n. [pl. -men (-mĕn)], [gentle+man], 1, a well-bred and honorable man; 2, a man: used as a term of politeness; as, show the gentleman to his room; 3, in Great Britain, one who is entitled to bear a coat of arms; one well born though not of the nobility; 4, in English law, a respectable man of independent income, who does not work for a living: pl. a term of polite address to an assembly of men or in the salutation of a letter.

gen-tle-man-ly (jĕn'tl-măn-lĭ), adj. polite in manner; well-trained socially.

gen-tle-wom-an (jĕ'tl-wo͝om″ăn), n. [pl. -women (-wĭm″ĕn)], [gentle+woman], 1, a woman of good birth and breeding; a lady; 2, formerly, an attendant upon a lady of rank.

gen-try (jĕn'trĭ), n. [prob. < obs. gentrice < O.F. genterise, corr. of gentelise < gentil < Lat. gentilis, of good birth], 1, people of education and breeding; in England, those ranking next below the nobility; 2, people of a particular class: usually contemptuous: Obs., 1, politeness; suavity; 2, rank by birth.

gen-u-flec-tion (jĕn″ū-flĕk'shŭn), n. [< Lat. genu, knee+flectere (flexus), to bend], the bending of the knee in worship. Also, gen″u-flex'ion.

gen-u-ine (jĕn'ū-ĭn), adj. [< Lat. genuinus, real, inborn < Aryan source], 1, of the original stock; derived from the true source or authorship; unadulterated; not counterfeit; 2, not hypocritical; sincere.—adv. gen'u-ine-ly.—n. gen'u-ine-ness.

Syn. true, pure, actual, authentic, unaffected, sincere.

ge-nus (jē'nŭs), n. [pl. genera (jĕn'ĕr-ȧ)], [Lat. = race < Aryan source], Zoöl. and Bot., a group having subordinate groups, called species, with certain common characteristics; the classification next below the family in scope, and next above the species; as, to the genus Felis belong various species, including the lion, leopard, tiger, and cat; Logic, a class of things made up of two or more species or lower classes.

ge-o-cen-tric (jē″ō-sĕn'trĭk), adj. [< Gk. gē (geō-), earth+kentron, center], Astron., referring to the earth as a center: a term applied to the position of a celestial object as seen from the center of the earth, in opposition to its heliocentric position, or position as seen from the center of the sun: geocentric theory, the theory held by ancient philosophers, that the earth is the center of the universe and of divine solicitude.—adv. ge″o-cen'tri-cal-ly.

ge-o-chem-is-try (jē″ō-kĕm'ĭs-trĭ), n. [geo- (< Gk. gē (geō-), earth)+chemistry], the science which treats of the chemical composition of the earth.—adj. ge″o-chem'i-cal.

ge-ode (jē'ōd), n. [< Fr. géode < Gk. geōdēs, earthy], a cavity in rock lined with crystals: Geol., a stone containing such a cavity; Mining, a portion of a vein lined with crystals.—adj. ge-od'ic (jē-ŏd'ĭk).

ge-o-des-ic (jē″ō-dĕs'ĭk), adj. [see geodesy], pertaining to geodesy (which see): geodesic line, or geodesic, a line on a surface forming the shortest possible path between two points on the surface: with reference to the earth often called geodetic line geodesics, n. pl. used as sing. mathematics dealing with geodesic lines.—adj. ge″o-det'ic.

ge-od-e-sy (jē-ŏd'ē-sĭ), n. [< Gk. gē (geō-), earth+daiein, to divide], 1, the science of measuring the size and shape of the earth, and of surveying areas so large that the earth's curvature must be considered; 2, formerly, the art of land surveying.

ge-o-dy-nam-ics (jē″ō-dī-năm'ĭks), n. pl. used as sing. [geo- (< Gk. gē (geō-), earth)+dynamics], the science of the dynamic or mechanical processes attending the formation of the earth and its surface.—adj. ge″o-dy-nam'ic; ge″o-dy-nam'i-cal.

ge-og-no-sy (jē-ŏg'nō-sĭ), n. [< Gk. gē (geō-), earth+gnōsis, knowledge], 1, the branch of geology treating of the materials constituting the earth, and of its general structure; 2, the knowledge or study of the mineral character of a particular district.

ge-og-ra-pher (jē-ŏg'rȧ-fẽr), n. [see geography], one who is versed in the science of the earth in its relation to human life.—abbr. geog.

ge-og-ra-phy (jē-ŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [pl. -phies (-fĭz)], [< Gk. gē (geō-), earth+graphē, a writing], 1, the science that describes and interprets the surface of the earth, its climate, the distribution of plant and animal life, its inhabitants, their distribution over the continents, their industries, etc.; 2, a treatise or manual on this subject.—abbr. geog.—adj. ge″o-graph'ic; ge″o-graph'i-cal.—adv. ge″o-graph'i-cal-ly.

ge-oid (jē'oid), n. [< Gk. gē, earth+eidos, shape], an imaginary body whose surface coincides with the mean sea level over the earth's surface.

ge-ol-o-gist (jē-ŏl'ŏ-jĭst), n. [see geology], one skilled in the science of geology.

ge-ol-o-gize (jē-ŏl'ŏ-jīz), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -gized (-jīzd), p.pr. -gizing], to study the formation or the structure of the earth.

ge-ol-o-gy (jē-ŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. [pl. -gies (-jĭz)], [< Gk. gē (geō-), earth+-logia, study], 1, the science that investigates the structure of the earth, the successive physical changes it has undergone, and the causes which have produced such changes; 2, a treatise on this subject.—adj. ge″o-log'ic (jē″ō-lŏj'ĭk); ge″o-log'i-cal.—adv. ge″o-log'i-cal-ly.

geom. abbr. geometry; geometrician; geometer; geometric; geometrical (also, geomet.).

ge-o-man-cy (jē'ō-măn″sĭ), n. [< Gk. gē (geō-), earth+manteia, divination], the art of divining the future, or good or ill fortune, from the figure suggested by a handful of earth thrown down, or by dots or lines placed at random on the earth's surface.—n. ge'o-man″cer.—adj. ge″o-man'tic.

ge-om-e-ter (jē-ŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [< Gk. geōmetrēs, a measurer < gē (geō-), earth+metron, a measure], one skilled in geometry; a geometrician.

ge-o-met-ric (jē″ō-mĕt'rĭk), adj. 1, pertaining to, or done by, geometry; 2, characterized by lines, angles, circles, etc.; as, a geometric design: geometric progression, Math., a series of arithmetical or algebraic expressions or quantities, each term of which except the first is obtained by multiplying the preceding term by a constant quantity or factor, called the ratio; as, 2, 4, 8, 16, 32 . . ., or n, nx, *nx*², *nx*³ . . . Also, ge″o-met'ri-cal.—adv. ge″o-met'ri-cal-ly.

ge-o-met-ri-cal lathe an engine for engraving complicated geometrical patterns; a rose engine: used in engraving plates from which bank notes or the like are printed.

ge-om-e-tri-cian (jē-ŏm″ē-trĭsh'ăn), n. one who is skilled in that branch of mathematics called geometry; a geometer.

ge-om-e-trid (jē-ŏm'ē-trĭd), n. any of an extensive family (Geometridæ) of moths, whose larvæ progress by humping or looping the body, and are often injurious to trees; a measuring worm.

LARVA OF GEOMETRID or measuring worm ge-om-e-try (jē-ŏm'ē-trĭ), n. [pl. -tries (-trĭz)], [< Gk. geōmetria, a measuring: see geometer], Math., 1, that branch of mathematics treating of the properties, measurements, and relations of lines, angles, surfaces, and solids: specifically, plane geometry, confined to magnitudes of two dimensions and in one plane; and solid geometry, including magnitudes of three dimensions; 2, a textbook or treatise on this subject.—v.i. ge-om'e-trize.

ge-oph-a-gy (jē-ŏf'ȧ-jĭ), n. [< Gk. gē (geō-), earth +phagein, to eat], the practice of eating clay or other earthy substances.—adj. ge-oph'a-gous.

ge-o-phys-ics (jē″ō-fĭz'ĭks), n. pl. used as sing. [geo- (< Gk. gē (geō-), earth)+physics], that part of physics relating to the earth, in such matters as the phenomena of the tides, magnetism, temperature, meteorology, etc.—adj. ge″o-phys'i-cal.

Geor-gette crêpe (jôr-jĕt'), dressmaker], a dull-finished, crinkly, sheer silk dress fabric. Also, geor-gette'.

Geor-gi-an (jôr'jĭ-ăn), adj. [< Lat. Georgius, George], 1, pertaining to one of the four Georges, kings of England from 1714 to 1830, or to the period of their reigns; 2, pertaining to George V of England, or to the period of his reign (1910–); 3, pertaining to the state of Georgia in the United States; 4, pertaining to the state of Georgia in Transcaucasia: —n. 1, a person living during the reign of any of the Georges, kings of England, or characterized by the ideas and manners then current; 2, a native of the state of Georgia in the United States or of that in Transcaucasia.

geor-gic (jôr'jĭk), adj. [< Gk. geōrgika (things) pertaining to husbandry < geōrgos, husbandman], pertaining to husbandry or farming:—n. a poem on a rural subject: the Georgics, four poems on different phases of husbandry, by the Roman poet Vergil.

ge-o-stat-ic (jē″ō-stăt'ĭk), adj. [< Gk. gē (geō-), earth+statikos, causing to stand], 1, pertaining to the pressure of earth or a like substance; 2, adapted to support the pressure of earth, as an arch.

ge-o-stat-ics (jē″ō-stăt'ĭks), n. pl. used as sing. that portion of mechanics dealing with rigid bodies in equilibrium, or with those forces tending to produce equilibrium in rigid bodies.

GEOLOGICAL CHART

NOTE.—The Chart is to be regarded as a key to the strata of the earth's surface, and is therefore arranged with the most recent periods and strata at the top and the oldest at the bottom. The reader who wishes to use it as a historical chart should begin at the bottom and read up.

ERAS	PERIODS	General character, and specific features, of physical and biological records; locations of typical surface exposures.
RECENT		The development of the reign of modern man: the development of brain and tools: written language; architecture, metal working, printing, steam, electricity, aviation.
		Final recession of European continental ice sheet.
CENOZOIC (Quaternary)	PLEISTOCENE (< Gk., "most recent")	Ice age: marked by the rise, culmination, and recession of the last continental ice sheets. Period marked by the appearance and rise of man, struggling for supremacy with larger, more powerful animals, traced from beginning of period in Eolithic age (Piltdown man and dawn of stone implements), through Paleolithic age (old stone age: Heidelberg and Neanderthal men, with stone tools), and Neolithic age (new stone age: Magdalenian and Aurignacian races (about 20,000 B. C.), with skilfully made implements, pictorial art, first use of metals, etc.): spoken language; use of fire; first domestication of wild animals.
CENOZOIC (Tertiary)	PLIOCENE (< Gk., "quite recent") MIOCENE (< Gk., "not so recent") OLIGOCENE (< Gk., "slightly recent") EOCENE (< Gk., "early recent")	Climax of development of mammals: rise of manlike types (Pithecanthropus erectus, about 750,000 B. C.). Europe; Asia; Africa; America. Greatest development of larger mammals: mastodons; camels; horses; cats; saber-toothed tiger; deer. Petroleum and natural gas. World-wide. Wide, grassy plains in central and western United States; rise of Alps, Himalayas, Andes Mts. Rise of higher mammals: vertebrates in large numbers: giant pig; rodents; dogs; anthropoid apes; well preserved insect remains. Gulf States; Panama; South America. Ancient life types disappear: dawn of recent life, of which species still exist. Eohippus, the dawn horse; primitive primates. Nummulite limestone in Egypt. World-wide.
MESOZOIC	UPPER CRETACEOUS (< Lat., creta, chalk) LOWER CRETACEOUS JURASSIC (< Jura Mountains, in central Europe) TRIASSIC (< Lat., "threefold")	Age of chalk and reptiles: high development and then extinction of dinosaurs; archaic mammals and small marsupials; rise of modern trees and flowering plants. Coal; chalk; flint; petroleum. England; France; polar lands; Asia; North Atlantic and Gulf coastal states; Montana; Colorado; Dakota. Toothed birds and flying reptiles: pterodactyls; coal. Jura Mountains; England; France; Germany; rare in America. Rocky Mountain, or Laramie, revolution: great change in physical geography and climate. Elevation of central North America, notably in the Rocky Mountain range; continental changes. World-wide. Sierra revolution: rise of Sierra Nevada and Coast ranges; vast eruptions of lava. Rise of dinosaurs; New Red sandstone: Newark; New England; the Palisades; Pennsylvania to Virginia; southwestern states; typically shown with threefold series of strata in Germany.
PALEOZOIC	PERMIAN (< province of Perm, east central Russia) PENNSYLVANIAN (Upper Carboniferous, or Coal Measures) MISSISSIPPIAN (Lower Carboniferous) DEVONIAN (< Deron, county of England) SILURIAN (< Silures, early Welsh people) ORDOVICIAN (< Ordovices, an early Celtic people of Wales) CAMBRIAN (< Cambria, L.L. name for Wales)	Period of unconformity: the Appalachian revolution: great geographic and biologic changes; the greatest of all known glacial periods. Culmination of Appalachian Mountains; anthracite coal; salt; gypsum. Climatic readjustment, accompanied by extinction of many Paleozoic life forms; rise of reptiles. Province of Perm; Texas; Kansas; Pennsylvania; all continents. Age of vast swamp forests; greatest known coal beds; insects: ancestors of modern grasshoppers; primitive spiders, cockroaches, dragon flies. All continents; typical in Pennsylvania (about 100,000,000 B. C.). Amphibians: sharks; corals; profuse crinoids. Indiana limestone. Mississippi valley, eastward to central Pennsylvania. Age of fishes; first land flora: Old Red sandstone; Pennsylvania petroleum and natural gas. Deronshire; much of North America; Europe. Invertebrate life highly developed; first known air-breathing land animals: scorpions. Iron ores; salt. Wales; Niagara Falls. Earliest known vertebrates, of fishlike types; sharks. Marine life forms profuse, especially mollusks. Petroleum and natural gas in Ohio and Indiana; lead and zinc ores; great limestone deposits. Great Britain; North America. Earliest known highly fossiliferous rocks: trilobites preëminent and widely varying in size; other marine invertebrates plentiful. Great Britain; North America. World-wide.
		Unconformity: great break in the geologic record.
ALGONKIAN (Proterozoic)	KEWEENAWAN (< Keweenaw Point, Michigan) HURONIAN (< Lake Huron)	Life remains scanty: lime-secreting algæ; protozoa; annelid worms; sponges. Ontario silver; Lake Superior copper. Oldest known glaciation: iron deposits of Lake Superior area. Laurentian revolution: unconformity. Rise of the Laurentian mountains.
ARCHÆAN (Archæozoic)	LAURENTIAN (< St. Lawrence river) KEEWATIN (< name of former district including central and western Canada)	Life evidences very obscure: of plant life, probably some microscopic algæ; no animal life known. Organic aspects of the world subordinate to physical aspects. Igneous rocks predominate; iron ores; pitchblende (uraninite) in South Dakota (about 1,500,000,000 B. C.). [The relation of the first two periods is obscure.] Impossible to distinguish Algonkian and Archæan rocks exactly. Traces found in practically all continents, especially in Scotland, Scandinavia, Grand Canyon, Canada to New England and New York, Pennsylvania to Georgia, Lake Superior region.
AZOIC		Cosmic stages of the earth's history; origin of the earth as a separate planet; beginnings of the atmosphere, oceans, continents. No definite evidences of life.

ge-o-ther-mic (jē″ō-thûr′mĭk), adj. [<Gk. gē (geō-), earth+thermos, heat], pertaining to the internal heat of the earth.

ger. abbr. gerund:—Ger., German; Germany; Germanic (also, Germ.).

ge-rah (gē′rə), n. [Heb.], an ancient Jewish coin or weight, about one twentieth of a shekel.

Ge-raint (gĕ-rānt′), n. [prob.<W.], in medieval romances, one of King Arthur's Knights: subject of two of Tennyson's "Idylls of the King."

ge-ra-ni-um (jĕ-rā′nĭ-ŭm), n. [Lat.<Gk. geranion, crane's-bill<geranos, crane], any of a large family (Geraniaceæ) of annual and perennial herbs of temperate and subtropical climates, especially of two genera, the one (Geranium) including the common, spring-blooming, pink- or purple-flowered wild geranium, or crane's-bill, of eastern North America, and the other (Pelargonium), chiefly native in South Africa, including many species cultivated as house and garden plants, some for their showy clusters of brilliantly colored or white flowers, and others for their fragrant foliage.—adj. ge-ra′ni-a′ceous (-ā′shŭs).

Gerd (gĕrd), n. [<O.N.], Norse Myth., a beautiful young Teutonic giantess and goddess, whose union with Frey, recounted in ancient Scandinavian lore, probably symbolizes the new life of spring. Also, Gerdh; Gerth (gĕrth); Gerth′r (gĕrth′r).

ger-fal-con (jûr′fô″kn; jûr′fôl″kn), n. [<O.F. gerfaucon<L.L. gerofalco<M.H.G. gīrvalke<O.H.G. gīri, greedy+Lat. falco, falcon], a large falcon found in the arctic regions and cold parts of America, Europe, and Asia. Also, gyr′fal″con.

ger-kin (gûr′kĭn), n. [see gherkin], a small cucumber used for pickling. See gher′kin, Pfd. S.

germ (jûrm), n. [<Fr. germe<Lat. germen, a sprout], 1, the rudimentary element of an animal or plant, capable of developing into one of its kind; a sprout; seed; 2, a microbe; any bacterium or protozoön, especially one which may cause disease; 3, that from which anything may spring; origin; as, the germ of war: Biol., the embryo; the lowest stage of development, before the animal has taken its distinctive form: germ cell, a cell which unites with another for reproduction, as the egg or the sperm, and which is indefinitely perpetuated: opposite of somatic cell, one of the structural constituents of living tissues, destroyed when its usefulness is past. (See gamete.)

Ger-man (jûr′măn), adj. [<Lat. Germanus, prob.<Celt, name meaning neighbors], pertaining to Germany, its people, or language; more generally, pertaining to the Teutonic peoples of central Europe:—n. 1, a native of Germany; a member of the Teutonic race; 2, the language of Germany: High German, the dialect of central and southern Germany: Old High German, this dialect as spoken from 800 to 1100: Middle High German, this dialect from 1100 to 1500: Low German, the dialect of northern Germany: Old Low and Middle Low German, this dialect in the two periods cited for High German: ¹german, an elaborate round dance: a cotillion.

²ger-man (jûr′măn), adj. [<O.F. germain<Lat. germanus, of same parents], of the same stock: used only in combination; as, cousin-german: Obs., germane; appropriate; relevant.

Ger-man cock-roach the Croton bug, a small, winged cockroach.

ger-man-der (jĕr-măn′dĕr), n. [<Gk. khamandrua<khamai, on the ground +drus, oak], Bot., any herb of a genus (Teucrium) of the mint family, including the wood sages.

ger-mane (jĕr-mān′; jûr′mān), adj. [see ²german], 1, related; akin; 2, relevant.

Ger-man-ic (jĕr-măn′ĭk), adj. [see German], 1, pertaining to Germany or to the Germans; 2, pertaining to the tall, blond race that occupied most of northwestern Europe about the beginning of the Christian era, or to the common language from which the dialects of the various divisions of the race, as English, Dutch, etc., were derived; Teutonic: —n. 1, the German language; 2, the common language once spoken by all the Germanic or Teutonic peoples: in this book called Teutonic.

Ger-man-ism (jûr′măn-ĭzm), n. 1, a German custom, manner of speech, or characteristic; 2, love of German institutions.

Ger-man-ist (jûr′măn-ĭst), n. a student of Germanic philology or literature.

ger-ma-ni-um (jĕr-mā′nĭ-ŭm), n. [<Lat. Germania, Germany], Chem., a rare, gray-white metallic element [symbol Ge] resembling tin.

Ger-man-ize (jûr′măn-īz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ized (-īzd), p.pr. -izing], [see German], to cause to become German or like the Germans in thought, spirit, institutions, etc.:—v.i. to become German or like the Germans in character.

Ger-man mea-sles a contagious disease resembling measles in the appearance of its eruptions, usually not very virulent.

Ger-man sil-ver a white alloy of nickel, copper, and zinc, used for scientific instruments, tableware, etc.: also called nickel silver.

Ger-man text modern German type; also, a type resembling it used for ornament or display in English printing (see App. I).

ger-mi-cide (jûr′mĭ-sīd), n. [<Lat. germen, germ +caedere, to kill], any substance or chemical preparation used to destroy disease germs and other microörganisms.—adj. ger″mi-cid′al.

ger-mi-cul-ture (jûr′mĭ-kŭl″tûr), n. [<Lat. germen, germ+cultura, culture], the artificial cultivation of bacteria or germs for scientific study.—n. ger″mi-cul′tur-ist.

ger-mi-nal (jûr′mĭ-năl), adj. [<Lat. germen, a sprout], pertaining to, or like, a germ or seed bud; sprouting; incipient; in an early stage of growth: opposite of somatic.

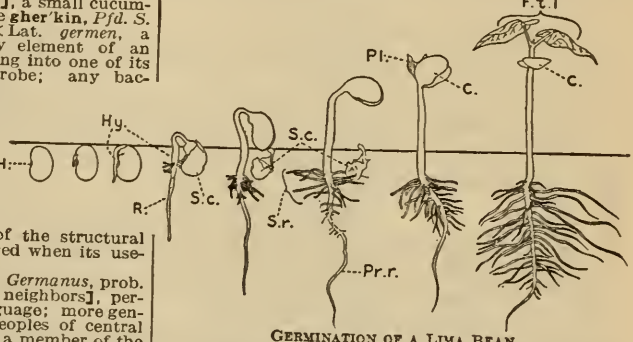
Ger-mi-nal (zhăr″mē″nal′; jûr′mĭ-năl), n. [Fr.: see germinal], in the Revolutionary calendar of the first French Republic, the seventh month of the year, from March 21 to April 19.



GERMINATION OF A LIMA BEAN

H., hilum; Hy., hypocotyl; R., radicle; S.c., seed coat; S.r., secondary root; Pr.r., primary root; Pl., plumule; C., cotyledon, or seed leaf; F.t.l., first true leaves.

ger-mi-nant (jûr′mĭ-nănt), adj. [see germinal], sprouting; gradually developing.

ger-mi-nate (jûr′mĭ-nāt), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -nated, p.pr. -nating], to sprout or bud; begin to develop into a higher form:—v.t. to cause to sprout or develop; hence, to produce.—adj. ger′mi-na-tive.

Syn. propagate, develop, sprout, bud.

ger-mi-na-tion (jûr″mĭ-nā′shŭn), n. the process or inception of growth or vegetation in a seed, bud, or germ (see illus. above).

germ plasm Biol., the substance in animal or vegetable cells by means of which hereditary characteristics reappear in offspring.

germ the-o-ry 1, the theory of the transmission of disease by infection with specific germs; 2, the theory that all life depends on the presence and development of living germs.

germ-ule (jûr′mūl), n. [<Lat. dim. of germen, a sprout], a small germ; a germ in an early stage of development.

ger-ry-man-der (gĕr′ĭ-măn′dĕr), v.t. [<humorous allusion to sala*mander*, from the shape of a certain voting district of Massachusetts in 1812, when Elbridge Gerry was governor], in United States politics, to divide arbitrarily, as a state, voting district, etc., so as to give an unfair advantage to a particular political party; misrepresent; garble:—n. (gĕr′ĭ-măn″dĕr), the act or result of redistricting arbitrarily a state or county.

ger-und (jĕr′ŭnd), n. [<Lat. gerundum, a thing to be done<gerere, to do], 1, in Latin, a verbal noun; a form of a verb used like a noun, but, like a verb, sometimes governing a noun or pronoun; 2, in English, a verbal noun, as in: his earning a salary depended upon his ability.—adj. ge-run′di-al.

ge-run-dive (jē-rŭn'dĭv), n. Lat. Gram., a verbal adjective with passive force, as amandus, to be loved, lovable:—adj. like, pertaining to, or having the nature of, the gerund; gerundial.

Ge-ry-on (jē'rĭ-ŏn), n. [< Gk. = shouter < gēruein, to shout], Gk. Myth., a winged, three-bodied being, king of Erythia, beyond Spain: killed by Hercules, who stole his red oxen as one of his labors.

ges-so (jĕs'ō), n. [It. = chalk, plaster < Lat. gypsum: see gypsum], Art, plaster of Paris, especially when used in painting or sculpture, or in bas-reliefs.
